37TH ANNUAL SMITHSONIAN
FOLKLIFE
FESTIVAL

APPALACHIA Heritage and Harmony
MALI From Timbuktu to Washington
SCOTLAND at the Smithsonian

June 25–July 6, 2003

Washington, D.C.
The annual Smithsonian Folklife Festival brings together exemplary keepers of diverse traditions, both old and new, from communities across the United States and around the world. The goal of the Festival is to strengthen and preserve these traditions by presenting them on the National Mall, so that the tradition-bearers and the public can connect with and learn from one another, and understand cultural differences in a respectful way.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION
Center for Folklife and Cultural Heritage
750 9th Street NW
Suite 4100
Washington, DC 20560-0953

www.folklife.si.edu

© 2003 by the Smithsonian Institution
ISSN 1056-6805

Editor: Carla Borden
Associate Editors: Frank Proschan, Peter Seitel
Art Director: Denise Arnot
Production Manager: Joan Erdesky
Design Assistant: Krystyn MacGregor Confair
Printing: Finlay Printing, Bloomfield, CT
Festival Sponsors

The Festival is co-sponsored by the National Park Service.

The Festival is supported by federally appropriated funds; Smithsonian trust funds; contributions from governments, businesses, foundations, and individuals; in-kind assistance; volunteers; and food, recording, and craft sales.

Major in-kind support for the Festival has been provided by media partners WAMU 88.5 FM—American University Radio, The Washington Post, washingtonpost.com, and Afropop, and by Motorola, Nextel, Whole Foods Market, and Go-Ped.

APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

This program is produced in collaboration with the Birthplace of Country Music Alliance and the Center for Appalachian Studies at East Tennessee State University.

Major contributions are provided by the Recording Industries Music Performance Trust Funds, the National Endowment for the Arts, King Pharmaceuticals, the Norfolk Southern Foundation, Tennessee Tourism, and West Virginia Division of Tourism. Additional support is provided by the Appalachian Regional Commission, the Virginia Foundation for Humanities, Eastman Chemical, and The United Company.

MALI: FROM TIMBUKTU TO WASHINGTON

This program is made possible by a partnership with the Government of Mali (Office of the President; Office of the Prime Minister; Malian National Folklife Festival Commission; Ministry of Tourism and Crafts; Ministry of Culture; Ministry of Women, Family, and Youth Affairs; and Ministry of Education), the World Bank, and the U.S. Agency for International Development. Additional supporting organizations include the U.S. Department of State, the Africa Society, Corporate Council on Africa, Friends of Mali, Association of Malians in Washington, and the Peace Corps.

SCOTLAND AT THE SMITHSONIAN

This program is produced in partnership with the Scottish Executive, with the collaboration of the Scottish Arts Council, and a donation from VisitScotland. The Leadership Committee is chaired by the Rt. Hon. Jack McConnell, MSP.

Major contributions are provided by William Grant & Sons, and Highlands & Island Enterprise. Support is provided by the Shetland Islands Council, Shetland Enterprise, and the Shetland Arts Trust. Additional cooperative efforts come from the University of Aberdeen, the University of Edinburgh, Lochcarron Mills, the Gaelic Arts Agency, the Gaelic Promotional Trust, the General Register Office for Scotland, Historic Scotland, the National Archives of Scotland, and the National Trust for Scotland. Major in-kind support is provided by Landscapes Unlimited and Hurdzan and Fry.

"For 37 years the Smithsonian Folklife Festival has been able to present the best traditional music from around the world without charge to the public. For 33 of those years, the Recording Industries Music Performance Trust Funds has been instrumental in making that possible. We are deeply grateful."
Table of Contents

The Festival: Doing the Public Good
LAWRENCE M. SMALL
7

The Cultural Edge
RICHARD KURIN
9

The 2003 Smithsonian Folklife Festival
DIANA PARKER
12

APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

Appalachia: Heritage and Harmony
JEFF PLACE
14

The Bristol Sessions
TED OLSON
18

Traditional Mountain Music on the Radio
RICH KIRBY
21

Appalachian Occupational Music
TED OLSON
24

Black Appalachian Music in the Mountains and Beyond
PAMELA E. FOSTER
25

Appalachia, Where Tradition and Technology Thrive
JEAN HASKELL
26

Religion in Appalachia
TROY GOWEN
27

Storytelling in Appalachia: A Sense of Place
JOSEPH SOBOL
29

Native American Traditions in Appalachia
BARBARA R. DUNCAN
30

A Taste of Appalachia
MARK SOHN
32

Appalachian Dance Traditions: A Multicultural Heritage
SUSAN EIKE SPALDING
33

Crafts and Craftspeople of the Appalachians
M. ANNA FARIELLO
35

The Blue Mountain Room at the White House
KATHLEEN CURTIS WILSON
36

For Further Information
38

MALI: FROM TIMBUKTU TO WASHINGTON

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington
MARY JO ARNOLDI and JOHN W. FRANKLIN
40

Mirror Images: Historical Links between the United States and Mali
MICHAEL TWITTY
42

Mali: A Rich and Diverse Culture
SAMUEL SIDIBÉ
43

From the Empires of the Golden Age to Independence
DRISSA DIAKITÉ
46

The Archaeological Record
KLÉNA SANOGO
47
Mali Today: Land, Society, People
   BINTOU SANANKOUA

Malian Traditional Music: Sounds Full of Meaning
   SALIA Malé

Modern Music in Mali
   MAMOUTOU KEITA

Crafts and Development
   MAIGA OUMOU MAIGA

Malian Textiles
   MOUSSA Konaté

Malian Architecture
   LASSANA CISSE

The Future of Mali's Past
   TÉRÉBA TOGOLA

Malian Cinema
   YOUSOOUF COULIBALY and ABOUBAKAR SANOGO

Malian Cuisine
   SAMUEL Sidibé and BINTOU SANANKOUA

For Further Information

SCOTLAND AT THE SMITHSONIAN

Scotland at the Smithsonian
   NANCY Groce

Scottish History: The Culture and the Folk
   EDWARD J. Cowan

Traditional Song and Music in Scotland
   MARGARET BENNETT

Scottish Dance
   STEPHANIE Smith

Panto in Scotland
   JOYCE McMillan

Scottish Gaelic
   HUGH Cheape

Scots
   BILLY Kay

Traditional Crafts in Contemporary Scotland
   LOUISE BUTLER

For Further Information

GENERAL FESTIVAL INFORMATION

Daily Schedules
   Site Map
   Evening Programs
Malian Cinema on the Mall
Of Related Interest
Festival Participants
Festival Sponsors
Staff
The Festival: Doing the Public Good

LAWRENCE M. SMALL
SECRETARY, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The Smithsonian has long been a force for good in our society by encouraging public knowledge of our historical, scientific, and cultural heritage. Given recent world events, the role the Institution plays is even more important. We need places where people of diverse backgrounds can gather together, learn from one another, and share in inspiring educational experiences. No better place exists than the Smithsonian Folklife Festival.

Each year, more than one million visitors come to the National Mall to learn about the art, knowledge, skill, and wisdom of the American people and those of other nations around the world. Visitors interact directly with musicians, craftspeople, cooks, storytellers, workers, and other cultural exemplars. They leave the Festival with a better understanding and appreciation of a broad range of cultural accomplishments and the people who achieve them—today, more than ever, this is a significant benefit.

At the same time that cultural differences reinforce divisions among some nations, religions, and ethnic groups, the digital communications revolution has reduced the distances between all nations. As the interactions among culturally diverse people increase, to be productive they should be based upon fact, not fiction, reality, not myth.

In its own marvelous way, the Festival fosters respect for, and understanding of, cultural differences. This year, tradition-bearers from Mali, Scotland, and Appalachia have gathered on the Mall, in what might first appear to be a puzzling juxtaposition. But a visit to the Festival will quickly reveal all sorts of cultural connections and relationships among them. Consider “old-time” and bluegrass music from Appalachia. Although often viewed as quintessentially American, many of our American ballads came from Scotland, carried by settlers in the late 1700s. And the banjo, vital to both traditions, came from West Africa, from lands traditionally part of the Malian empire. The instrument was crafted and re-crafted by African Americans and became a central part of our musical heritage. In bluegrass bands you can hear a unique American story, the melding together of an African and European heritage.

The connections do not stop in America. Scots back home, reflecting upon their emigrant experience, invented dances and called one “America.” Malian balladeers, strumming their lutes and singing of their brethren, incorporated the enslavement experience into their repertoire of historical tales. Cultural connections go well beyond home. The bluegrass band from East Tennessee State University includes students from around the world and performs for fans in Japan. Pipe bands play Scottish music all over the world—from official functions in Bermuda to weddings in India.

Culture—creative, adaptive, enjoyable, and educational—has the power to unite disparate people the world over. The Festival, made possible by the gracious participation of our invited friends from Mali, Scotland, and Appalachia, and of visitors to the Mall, is a wonderful demonstration of this power. We at the Smithsonian are proud to take up this role and invite you to share in it.
The Cultural Edge

RICHARD KURIN, DIRECTOR, SMITHSONIAN CENTER FOR FOLKLIFE AND CULTURAL HERITAGE

This summer, the Festival features programs on the cultures of Mali, Scotland, and Appalachia. Each, obviously, could stand on its own. Yet their juxtaposition on the National Mall, while largely arbitrary, nonetheless suggests a broader conceptualization. The Festival's participants—creative musicians and artisans who will sit together on shuttle buses, live and eat at the same hotel, and jam together in the evening—will surely make something of sharing a common moment. So what to say about this mix?

Mali, Scotland, and Appalachia are different types of entities. Mali is an independent nation; Scotland is part of a larger United Kingdom; Appalachia is a region of the United States. They represent three different continents, and sub-regions of those continents at that. But there are similarities. All are relatively sparsely populated compared to nearby population centers. All are possessed of a rugged natural environment that posed historical challenges for economies, communication, and transportation. Their populations have also reflected upon and struggled over issues of representation—basic ways of having their voices heard. All are democracies. Mali was home to a series of historic empires and then part of France's colonial regime before winning independence in 1960. Scotland was long an independent kingdom, fighting and later united with England, and now gaining a measure of autonomy. Appalachia has always been part of larger colonies and states but lacking in enough political weight to have a strong voice across their boundaries. Most interestingly, all have been centers of immense cultural creativity. The Festival programs this year thus provide a good case for thinking about culture in a more general way.

During various periods of human history, it has been commonplace for rulers and even the ruled to think in terms of center and periphery. There is the imperial capital and the hinterland, the metropole and the distant colony. Such thinking has a contemporary dimension. Politically, is the world to be increasingly dominated by one superpower, or is it moving toward a more multipolar, multisectoral world with varied and numerous power centers? Economists in this era of unprecedented globalization see the United States as the engine of worldwide growth, but also find multiple centers of strong commercial activity in Europe and East Asia. With culture—as with politics and economics—can we also speak of cultural centers and hinterlands?

Folklorist Alan Lomax, who had a profound influence on the Festival and who passed away last year, had argued for decades that cultural centers were to be found all over the planet. He warned that the diversity of local, regional, ethnic, and national cultures was in increasing danger from the spread of a powerful, central homogenizing force—a singular, global, mass commercial culture. The diverse cultures would "gray out," he predicted, unless there was countervailing action to keep such cultures vital. The potential loss of thousands of languages, belief systems, songs, oral histories, and poetries would be profound and harmful to the species.

An assessment of the cultural situation today in this regard is surely mixed. On one hand, there has been an expansion of a singular mass culture across the globe. Billions of people have been exposed to similar products, ideas, technologies, musics, and other cultural expressions.
There is a greater commonality among all humans than ever before—more people are listening to the same musics, speaking the same handful of languages, eating the same foods, watching the same movies and television programs than ever before. There are unprecedented opportunities for people to communicate, share with, and learn from one another. In many cases, that expansion of a largely commercial mass culture has detracted from more localized traditions. Some languages have withered as they have been devalued in schools and the workplace.
Songs and foods have retreated from public spaces into tight-knit communities and private households. But we have not seen the full-scale demise of local, regional, national, ethnic, and religious traditions. To the contrary, these forms of culture are in many cases quite healthy and assertive; in some cases they too in their own way have gone global, found new means of propagation and meaning. Some forms of culture have even been rejuvenated, both in resisting outside influences as well as in embracing them.

Profound, beautiful, interesting, insightful cultural creations have been produced all over the planet. Cultural scholars and historians have had a hard time identifying the conditions where and when tremendous spurts of such creativity will emerge—for such creative genius is not necessarily associated with political power or wealth. Great food, great music, great art emerge among the rich and victorious, but also among the poor and oppressed. Furthermore, what people may take to be the "center" of culture or civilization may depend upon where one stands.
The distinguished regal capital for the ruler may be the decadent, hollow heart of the beast for the ruled. One person's center can be another's frontier; the margins of urban society—the desert, the forests, the hills, the mountains, and even the inner city—may indeed be the places where people find their true spirit.

Consider Mali—home to Timbuktu (Tombouctou), regarded by some as the "end of the earth." Nothing could be further from the truth.
Timbuktu was at the crossroads of West Africa, the north-south salt and "ink" routes across the Sahara and the famed gold route traversing the Niger River. It hosted an important university during the 16th century, scholars of Islam and Judaism, and the most amazing of architectural arts.
Timbuktu was at the center of great civilization.

Or take Scotland. Its highlands and islands may appear to be quite distant from European centers of culture. Yet in the 18th and 19th centuries, Scotland was at the heart of the Industrial Revolution. Its scientists and thinkers excelled in the making of modern technology, medicine, and philosophy.

Appalachia might be perceived as a mountainous enclave that has been marginal to the development of the United States. But that would be a historically erroneous view. In the 18th century, Appalachia was at the cutting edge of settlement and expansion. Its spirit fueled an American ideal. Trails, rivers, and later railroads linked the region to East Coast cities and the West. It became a meeting point and crucible for layering of cultural influences from the British Isles, Africa, and other parts of Europe. As a region, it has come over centuries to embody a distinctly “American” culture.

Cultural centers often become so because they join disparate currents of creativity. Mali stands at the crossroads of northern and western Africa, the Africa of the Sahara Desert and that of the Niger River. Numerous ethnic groups, practicing different religions and speaking many languages, have been brought together in a kind of cousinage that has facilitated a fascinating sharing of culture. So too has Scotland joined lowland, highland, and island communities, people speaking English, Scots, and Gaelic, and those worshipping in diverse ways. And emigrants from Scottish and Malian lands contributed to the culture of Appalachia.

Culture not only flows into centers, it also flows outward. Cultures, if vital, are often at the edge of change and interchange. When culture is dynamic and creative, it cannot be bottled up or confined like a static, dusty treasure. With Scotland this outflow is so ubiquitous as to be almost unrecognizable. Revelers, not only in Times Square but in Singapore and other cities around the world, ritually sing a classic Scottish song by Robert Burns, “Auld Lang Syne,” to bring in the New Year. Golfers around the world play on links with clubs and balls first developed in Scotland. Mali too is not just on the receiving end of cultural creativity. Musicians from Timbuktu and elsewhere in Mali are world music superstars, with fans seeing their concerts in Europe, Asia, and the United States, and on the Internet as well. Bogolan mudcloth and indigo-dyed fabric made by expert Malian craftswomen are sold not only in home markets, but also in fashion salons around the world. As for Appalachia, its music is now everywhere. Despite its “old-time” label the O Brother, Where Art Thou? soundtrack sold more than six million copies and won a Grammy, moving well beyond home and challenging contemporary popular music.

Cultural creativity, quality, and vitality travel well. This year, cultural creativity, quality, and vitality come to us from Mali, Scotland, and Appalachia. The Festival on the Mall becomes a new edge in a world of cultural centers, where participants, visitors, and organizers may come together—exchanging cultural insights and experiences, while celebrating our ability to do so in an enjoyable, appreciative, and respectful way.
The 2003 Smithsonian Folklife Festival

DIANA PARKER
DIRECTOR, SMITHSONIAN FOLKLIFE FESTIVAL

WELCOME TO THIS YEAR'S FESTIVAL. Like its predecessors, this Festival has been years in the making and is typical in the way that programs were proposed. Mali was the first to express interest in 1998, when U.S. Ambassador David Rawson suggested that Mali be considered at some point in the future as a featured country. Two years later, then Minister of Tourism Zakaiyatou Halatine met with Festival staff and decided that Mali should be highlighted on the National Mall. A Mali National Commission was appointed, curators named on both sides of the ocean, and planning and fund-raising began. We were aware of the eminence of Malian musicians in the thriving world music scene, and research into the rich vein of expressive culture across the nation brought forth more extraordinary material than any ten Festivals could use: breathtaking textiles, exquisitely sculpted jewelry, architecture unsurpassed anywhere, and more.

The Appalachian program came next. It was proposed as part of a larger celebration, as is frequently the case at the Festival. A team from the Birthplace of Country Music Alliance asked if we could be part of their year-long celebration of the 75th anniversary of the historic Bristol Sessions. In August 1927, Ralph Peer, a talent scout for the Victor Talking Machine Company, went to Bristol, Tennessee, to record musicians from the region for potential use by the label. On that trip he recorded the Carter Family and Jimmie Rodgers, and commercial country music began to thrive. From that day to this, the region has continued to produce a treasure trove of talented musicians—some famous, and some just creating beauty every day of their lives because that is what they do. The Festival has brought us in touch with a wide array of music types and talents.

Scotland is here because one of our own scholars, Dr. Nancy Groce, thought that it would make a wonderful Festival program. She convinced us, the Scottish Executive, and scores of artists, partners, and funders along the way. We knew before research began that Scotland had a lively traditional music scene and had seen an explosion of talent and confidence in Caledonian culture in recent decades. We also came to appreciate the pride of workmanship and attention to detail apparent in Fair Isles knitting and Harris Tweed weaving; in blending the perfect dram of Scotch; and the engineering genius in sculpting daunting golf courses.

On first blush it is clear the three programs share extraordinary artistic excellence. The artists at this year's Festival are quite simply among the very best we have ever presented. It turns out that there are many other parallels to explore.
All three cultures preserve their history in song. Griots and story-singers in Mali have safeguarded the history of the place and the genealogy of its leaders for centuries; in Scotland and Appalachia, ballads and other narrative song styles have served a similar purpose. Major issues and events still inspire artists in all three cultures today. Carl Rutherford from Warriormine, West Virginia, Dorothy Myles of Appalachia, Virginia, and Brian McNeill of Falkirk, Scotland, write songs about coal mining and its economic, social, and health impacts. In unforgettable songs Oumou Sangaré of Bamako, Mali, and Karine Polwart of Scotland draw attention to the concerns of women in contemporary life. Adam McNaughtan composes memorable songs about life in contemporary Glasgow. At the Festival you can see all of these wonderful artists perform, and you may also hear them discuss the role of song in the conscience of a people.

Appalachian flatfoot dancing, as performed brilliantly by John Dee Holeman, has been linked by scholars to both British clogging and West African dance. Cooks in Mali and Appalachia foodways demonstrations will be making stewed chicken dishes and using okra and beans. Cooks from both Scotland and Appalachia have recipes for meat pies and strawberry jams.

We could continue, but the point is clear. We in the United States trace our heritage to many sources, but none more strongly than the British Isles and West Africa. Many of the settlers who came to Appalachia were of Scottish and Scots-Irish descent, and many of the enslaved people who were captured and brought here against their will were from the area around Mali. The culture they brought with them enriches our lives in forms new and old. This Festival gives us the opportunity to recognize the artistic excellence in all three cultures, and to pay a special tribute to Mali and Scotland, to whom we owe a great debt for their contributions to the best of what we have become.
THE PERIOD FROM JULY 2002 THROUGH JULY 2003 has been declared by Congress the "Year of Appalachia." The year also marks the 75th anniversary of the historically important Victor recording sessions held in Bristol, Tennessee, in 1927. A small museum in Bristol administered by the Birthplace of Country Music Alliance (BCMA)—a non-profit group run by country music enthusiasts and supporters of Appalachian music that is also an affiliate of the Smithsonian—approached the Smithsonian Center for Folklife and Cultural Heritage with a proposal to mount a Folklife Festival program in 2003 celebrating Appalachian culture. The year began with a series of regional concerts in Appalachia and now culminates with the Appalachia: Heritage and Harmony program on the National Mall in Washington, D.C.

Smithsonian staff worked closely with scholars and experts in the Appalachian region to help us tell their story, to discover what qualities in the region have made it such a hotbed of musical creativity and cooperation. Especially important in this process have been the staff of the BCMA and the Center for Appalachian Studies at East Tennessee State University in Johnson City. We also relied on volunteers from other regional institutions—music scholars, musicians, and experts on Appalachian culture—and we thank them for their contributions of time and knowledge.

Although it was not the first time country music had been recorded for commercial distribution, the 1927 Bristol Sessions are considered the "big bang" that kicked off the country music industry. These were the first recordings of the original Carter Family and the singing brakeman, Jimmie Rodgers, the two most important early country music stars. They began what has now become a multi-billion-dollar business. For this reason the area around Bristol, Virginia/Tennessee, has been referred to as "the Birthplace of Country Music." (For more on the Bristol Sessions see page 18.)

The program Appalachian: Heritage and Harmony focuses on the region within a hundred miles of Bristol, although certainly important music was and still is being made in the other parts of Appalachia. What forces converged in this one area of the United States to produce this music? There were various factors: isolation, strength of family, a strong religious faith, a feeling of community, and a sense of innovation. People come together musically at various social settings—home, church, festivals. One can find local stores where people gather to "jam" on weekends; the store in Floyd, Virginia,
A French postcard depicts a musician in West Africa playing a precursor to the banjo. Photo courtesy Benno Häuple and Cecelia Conway

Tin pan banjo, 1880–1920, maker unknown. Photo by Richard Strauss © Smithsonian Institution

Virginia, is one of the best known. These non-programmed gatherings to play music are important to the culture. At music festivals, musicians can be found playing together wherever they can find space. The area's music has influenced subsequent American popular music, but traditional music is still alive and thriving in the region, with younger people learning to play. Traditional music is even being taught in schools, such as the Mt. Rogers Combined School in Virginia and East Tennessee State University, which has a program in bluegrass. Nowadays, the music is also played and loved all over the planet, from Europe to Japan.

The Festival program surveys the different kinds of music one can find in the region. There are older master performers and those just starting out. During our research for this program, we found an embarrassment of riches. For every group we selected to bring to the Festival there were dozens of other worthy candidates.

Of course, music existed in the Appalachian region for many centuries before European colonists arrived. The American Indian peoples have a strong musical tradition, and performers in Cherokee, North Carolina, still dance to and sing traditional songs (see page 30).

The roots of country music as we know it began after the immigration to Appalachia of settlers from the British Isles, beginning in the 1750s and peaking in the 1820s and 1830s. These individuals, moving west into the mountains, brought with them their songs, dances, and instrumental traditions. Over time their traditions were influenced by people around them, especially African Americans. Other groups migrated to the region, particularly after the beginnings of the railroad and coal industries in the 1870s, and these migrants from other European countries brought their own cultures with them as well.

The banjo and fiddle have been the mainstays of music in Appalachia. The banjo is derived from West African lutes that slaves had known; the violin or fiddle has its origins in Europe. Three other significant instruments in the development of country music are the guitar; the dulcimer, an instrument from Germany; and the autoharp. The guitar began to grow in importance in the early 20th century. The dulcimer has been used for solo accompaniment and increased in popularity dramatically during the 1950s, owing to the recordings and performances of Kentucky-born Jean Ritchie. The autoharp was invented by Charles F. Zimmerman in 1865. During the years 1900–1920, it began to be sold in the Southern mountain regions through mail-order catalogs and door-to-door salesmen-tuners, and it found its way into Southern musical groups, most notably the Carter Family.

Despite the segregation that characterized racial relations in the region as elsewhere, blacks and whites would come together over music. In one instance in the 1920s in Georgia, the African-American Baxter Brothers recorded with the Anglo-American Georgia Yellow Hammers, but crossing of boundaries in such circumstances was not unique. (For more on the role of African-American music see page 25.)

The Appalachian mountain region was very isolated before railroad lines were built, and even afterwards only those near a rail line or with money to leave got out of their own environs. In any event, it took a long time to travel very far, and most people stayed close to home and created their own entertainment. A combination of poverty, self-subsistence, and isolation motivated residents to be innovative. Many a cabin had a homemade banjo or fiddle hanging on the wall. North Carolina guitarist Doc Watson remembers making his own instruments as a child, his first experiment involving tying a wire to the granary door and manipulating it to make notes. The family banjo had been made from the hide of a family pet.

Fiddlers or banjoists would frequently entertain at social functions. A.L. Longstreet, writing in 1835, described a rural house party in Georgia; word was given out that a dance was being held at some farmer's house, a room or two was stripped of furniture, and a fiddler was hired to keep the dancers moving. This same scenario could be repeated a hundred years later. At regional fiddle contests documented as far back as 1736, players would gather to show off their skills (see Malone 2002, 17–18).

Some older ballads from the British Isles were sung as they had come over, but others started to evolve into what began to be referred to as “Native American” ballads. Religious sensitivities made it awkward to sing of the murder, adultery, and thievery that were described in many British ballads, so the plot lines began to be sanitized, or a verse with a moral directive was tacked on at the end. Singers began to compose new “American” songs based on local events, songs like the “Wreck of the Old 97” or “John Henry.”

During the 19th century other musical styles began to influence country singers in Appalachia. Religion has always had an important role in daily life in Appalachia, and in turn religious music has had a major influence on the secular music of the region (see page 27). Appalachian musicians could frequently find common ground by going back to the
The Bristol Sessions
TED OLSON

Today a commercially successful, internationally appreciated genre of American music, country music was first commercially recorded in the early 1920s. Since then, it has been strongly influenced by traditional and popular music genres from several regions of the United States—by gospel and blues from the South, cowboy music from the West, and Tin Pan Alley music from the North. Granted these influences, Appalachian music and Appalachian musicians have played a central role in the creation and evolution of country music.

Shortly after World War I, technological developments in sound recording led to the proliferation of commercially distributed disks, which showcased opera, Tin Pan Alley pop, marching band, and dance music. African-American audiences preferred recordings of blues music (generally referred to by the record industry at the time as “race music”). The first recording sessions of country music were conducted in the early 1920s, in such cities as New York and Atlanta. Country music was then known as “hillbilly music,” a catch-all term for much of the white folk and popular music composed and performed in the Southern United States during that era. Musicians from across the South—including many from Appalachia—traveled to those cities, for the experience of making records and the possibility of financial reward. The music recorded at these studios, incorporating essentially the same repertoire then being performed on front porches and at other community events in the South, sold far more copies than record companies and producers had anticipated.

Looking for additional musical talent to make more “hillbilly” records, producers transported equipment to the countryside where the musicians lived. While some of the recordings sold reasonably well, their sound quality was often poor.

Two of the major record companies of the 1920s, Columbia and OKeh, had successfully promoted commercial recordings of “hillbilly music,” while another important label, the Victor Talking Machine Company (later renamed RCA Victor Records), was seeking to tap deeper into the new market. In 1927, Victor hired producer Ralph Peer, who had been responsible for the first commercially successful “hillbilly” records (by Fiddlin’ John Carson, made in Atlanta and released on OKeh). Peer identified an ideal place for making some new recordings: Bristol, a small city straddling the Tennessee/Virginia state line. He knew that some of the finest musicians who had appeared on “hillbilly” records were from this region. On July 22, 1927, Peer and his two engineers set up a temporary studio on the Tennessee side of State Street in downtown Bristol; and on Monday, July 25, the now-famous “Bristol Sessions” began, showcasing a well-known local musician, Ernest Stoneman (from the nearby Virginia Blue Ridge, Stoneman had already enjoyed several “hillbilly” hit recordings). By their completion on Friday, August 5, the Bristol Sessions yielded 76 recorded performances by 19 separate musical acts. Utilizing what was then state-of-the-art equipment, Peer and his engineers ensured that the recordings exceeded all previous “hillbilly” recordings in sound quality. Equally significant was the high quality of the performances that Peer coaxed from the musicians—including two renowned acts “discovered” in Bristol: Jimmie Rodgers, of Meridian, Mississippi, and the Carter Family, from nearby Maces Springs, Virginia.

Although Peer was primarily interested in producing records that would sell, his meticulous attention to quality at Bristol produced definitive recordings of lasting merit. Those recordings continue to influence musicians around the world—perhaps not many contemporary mainstream country musicians, but certainly numerous musicians in the contemporary bluegrass, revivalist folk music, Americana, and rock music scenes. Also remembered within the region that hosted them, the Bristol Sessions are celebrated by such local organizations as the Birthplace of Country Music Alliance in Bristol and at such performance venues as the Carter Family Fold in nearby Hiltons, Virginia.
old hymns they learned in church. When bluegrass star Ralph Stanley of Virginia and Kentucky musician Roscoe Holcomb were brought north to play for folk music audiences in the early 1960s, they used to spend time singing from Baptist hymnals while traveling on the bus. The bluegrass repertoire today often includes some of these old hymns, and almost all bluegrass groups record gospel in addition to secular music.

Other forms of popular music were present in the region to learn from. Traveling tent and medicine shows introduced Tin Pan Alley and vaudeville songs and brought instrumental banjo pieces from the minstrel stage to paying audiences. Also, late 19th-century songbooks featured sentimental songs written for the parlor piano. The repertoires of many early country recording artists contained songs from all these sources, intermingling them in a personal style. What is now considered “traditional folk” music frequently includes songs written by professional songwriters during the 19th and early 20th centuries.

Two developments in the 1920s helped spread country music. One was the beginnings of radio (see page 21). People would gather to listen to favorite programs at the house of a neighbor who was fortunate enough to have a radio; this became an alternative to the house party. Regional radio shows were very important in promoting the music careers of many regional performers. In the 1930s and 1940s, powerful radio stations were set up right over the Mexican border, to circumvent F.C.C. limitations on wattage. These shows included acts such as the Carter Family, and they could be heard in Appalachia and as far north as Canada. The second development was the beginning of commercial recording, which allowed local Appalachian musicians to make records that could be sold to their neighbors. The Smithsonian Festival program celebrates the recording sessions in Bristol in 1927, the most important of these early sessions. The early records of Appalachian performers featured individual singers, instrumental soloists, gospel singers and groups, and especially string bands.

The Great Depression put a damper on the recording industry, and very few groups sold enough disks to continue to record. Most musicians either stopped playing or performed only locally. The music stayed at home in the region and continued to be part of community life. After World War II, the country music industry discovered there was more money to be made recording new compositions (or copyrighted arrangements of traditional songs) on which additional royalties could be collected, and so traditional music began to be used less and less. However, many of the performers who became big stars in Nashville in the next twenty years had moved there from the Appalachians. Dolly Parton from Sevierville, Tennessee, Patsy Cline from Winchester, Virginia, and Loretta Lynn from Butcher Hollow, Kentucky, were among them. The outside world rediscovered Appalachian music during the Folk Revival of the 1950s and has done so again from time to time since—most recently as a result of the soundtrack of the film O Brother, Where Art Thou?

One of the most important musical styles in Appalachia is the string band. A typical string band consisted of fiddle, banjo, and guitar. Some of the early
A parking-lot session from the mid-'60s at the Galax Oldtime Fiddler's Convention in Galax, Virginia. Photo by Scott Odell, courtesy J. Scott Odell Collection, Archive Center, National Museum of American History

At the 1927 Bristol Sessions Ernest "Pop" Stoneman (guitar) and Hattie Stoneman performed as part of The Dixie Mountaineers. Photo courtesy the Birthplace of Country Music Alliance

String bands of note were Charlie Poole and the North Carolina Ramblers, the Skillet Lickers, the Fruit Jar Drinkers, Mainer's Mountaineers, the Carolina Tar Heels, and the Bogtrotters, all of whose records were very popular. Songs from these groups' repertoires can be heard in modern string band music, and the instrumentalists in these groups are still revered and emulated by younger players.

String band music continues to thrive in Appalachia. There are numerous annual gatherings and fiddle contests including Galax, Union Grove, and Clifftop. ("Fiddle contests" are not just for fiddlers but include competitions on many instruments as well as band competitions, broken down by age group.) One of the great Southern string bands today is Ralph Blizard and the New Southern Ramblers. Blizard, from Blountville, Tennessee, is an acknowledged master and one of the great fiddlers playing in the longbow style. He is the recipient of a National Heritage Fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts. In southern Virginia, legendary fiddler Albert Hash was the founder and leader of the well-known White Top Mountain Band. After Hash's death, his brother-in-law Thornton Spencer, along with Thornton's wife Emily and family, have carried on the band. In addition, Emily Spencer runs the program at the Mt. Rogers Combined School in White Top that instructs students in old-time music.

The great Georgia string band the Skillet Lickers is still performing. One of the founders of the group was Gid Tanner, and the group already has passed to four generations of Tanners. Gid's son Gordon led the group after Gid and appeared at the 1980 Smithsonian Folklife Festival; the group is now in the hands of grandson Phil and great-grandson Russ. Other string bands, both young and old, can be found at any festival in the region. Younger performers Cary Fridley, Rayna Gellert, Trish Kilby, and Todd Meade lead some of the younger bands. There is certainly a great future ahead for string band music.

When most people think of old-time string band music in Appalachia, they think of a group of older white musicians, but for many years there was a thriving African-American string band tradition. These bands entertained in the coal camps and at various social gatherings. Two of the early black string bands of the 20th century were from Tennessee: Gribble, Lusk and York; and the great string band consisting of Carl Martin, Ted Bogan, and Howard Armstrong. Martin, Bogan, and Armstrong reunited to play festivals in the 1970s. Fiddler Howard "Louie Bluie" Armstrong is still active in 2003 at 94 years of age. Other Knoxville-area musicians of note were guitarist Brownie McGhee and Lesley Riddle, the man who taught Maybelle Carter the guitar style for which she is famous and which has been adopted by many later guitarists. The black string band tradition is quickly disappearing, however. Among the few players left is Joe Thompson, who along with his late cousin Odell entertained in North Carolina for many years. Nat Reese grew up in the coal fields of West Virginia and learned to play in many musical styles including gospel, swing, and blues while entertaining in the rough bars in the coal region. Sparky and Rhonda Rucker from Maryville, Tennessee, are performers and scholars of traditional African-American music.

The recent feature film Songcatcher tells a fictionalized story of the song-collecting efforts of Olive Dame Campbell and Cecil Sharp in North Carolina shortly before World War I. Campbell shared her work with Sharp, a noted British folklorist, who was amazed at how many ballads that had ceased to be performed in the British Isles still existed in Appalachia. Between the two, they collected hundreds of ballads, published as Folk Songs of the Southern Appalachians. Other collectors subsequently traveled to the Appalachians to collect and record songs. The Library of Congress Archive of Folk Song has a large collection. This fieldwork passion was renewed during the Folk Revival, when younger folk music enthusiasts traveled south to find old singers and instrumentalists. John Cohen and Peter Gott recorded in Madison County, North Carolina, documenting singers including those of the Wallin, Norton, and Chandler families, some of whom had been present when Sharp visited in 1916. There are fewer traditional ballad singers left in the mountains as we enter the 21st century, but among the notable keepers of the flame is Sheila Kay Adams of Mars Hill, North Carolina, who headedquartered in Nashville and based on the musical styles and images of the rural South and West. The industry dropped the term "hillbilly"—thought to be demeaning—and called the genre Country and Western.

Bill Monroe and His Blue Grass Boys. Photo by Ray Lawson, courtesy WMMT FM/Appalshop

No longer in the media spotlight, traditional artists in the mountains kept playing and developing their music. Musicians who came mostly from the "Birthplace of Country Music" area took the lead in developing bluegrass, a hard-driving evolution of the older string band music. Much of this was nurtured by small regional radio stations including WNWA, Norton, Virginia; WCYB, Bristol, Tennessee; and WNOX, Knoxville. A token old-time music presence persisted on the Grand Ole Opry, but there was little traditional music to be heard on mainstream radio in the postwar decades.

The urban Folk Revival of the 1960s brought new attention to mountain music. Traditional artists could be heard on college and public radio stations across the country even though their music was not aired in their home communities. Over the past twenty years, "roots" music has become a regular presence on public and alternative radio. The recent success of O Brother, Where Art Thou? was due almost entirely to promotion outside the usual music industry channels.

Within the "Birthplace of Country Music" area today, traditional and bluegrass music can be heard on an increasing number of public stations including WDVX, Knoxville; WETS, Johnson City, Tennessee; WMMT, Whitesburg, Kentucky; and WNCW, Spindale, North Carolina. WPAQ in Mount Airy, North Carolina, deserves special mention as a commercial station that has broadcast live music from its mountain community for the past fifty years.
Carolina, who learned many of her songs from her relatives, especially her great-aunt, Dellie Chandler Norton. Adams presents programs on ballads at festivals, schools, and universities. Other North Carolinians who continue to perform the old songs and stories are Bobby McMillon from Lenoir and Laura Boosinger from Asheville, a younger performer who has studied the music and songs of the region extensively and plays on a number of stringed instruments. West Virginian Ginny Hawker, along with her husband Tracy Schwarz, is another singer adept at old ballads and hymns. She teaches singing yearly at the Augusta Heritage Festival in Elkins, West Virginia, a series of weeklong programs pairing master performers as teachers with students who wish to learn traditional performance styles.

Gospel and religious music will be represented at the Smithsonian Festival by Dorothy Myles, a native of Cumberland, Kentucky (now living in Appalachia, Virginia), and Still Waters. Myles writes her own religious songs as well as mining-oriented songs. Still Waters is a bluegrass gospel group from Hindman, Kentucky, who sing in an older style.

Mining songs have always been an important part of the occupational lore of the region (see page 24). Songs have been written to help inspire coal miners in their labor struggles with company owners. Continuing the tradition of legendary songwriters like the members of the Garland Family are West Virginians Carl Rutherford of Warriormine and Elaine Purkey of Chapmanville. Rutherford worked the mines as a youth until bad health forced him to find another line of work. He is a composer of strong mining songs including "Tops off Our Pretty Mountains" and is also a fine guitar player in the style of country music pioneers Dick Justice and Frank Hutchison. Elaine Purkey began to write songs while involved in the Pittston Coal Strike in 1989-90. She began to perform at festivals in the 1990s and impressed all those who heard her, including the great labor songwriter, Hazel Dickens. Railroad work crews also wrote rhythmic songs to help them time out the laying and lining up of railroad track. The Buckingham Lining Bar Gang is made up of former railroad workers who demonstrate this process.

One of the few musical forms to have been created wholly within the United States is bluegrass music. Bill Monroe, from western Kentucky, is credited with its invention and is called the "Father of Bluegrass." "Bluegrass" comes from the name "The Blue Grass Boys," a group that under Monroe began to play a newer, faster style of string band and country music with a focus on "high lonesome" singing and instrumental prowess. Although bluegrass was not created in Appalachia, many of the other important early bluegrass performers are from the region. Virginians Carter and Ralph Stanley and North Carolinian Earl Scruggs are early bluegrass legends. One cannot overemphasize the importance of regional radio stations such as WCYB Bristol in the rise of bluegrass. The central Appalachian region has continued to be one of the important centers of the style to this day. There are many bluegrass groups that tour nationally and whose records sell all over the world, but there are hundreds of smaller regional bands who play local events and the festival circuit during the summer. Among these, the O'Quinns are a family group who come from Birchleaf, Virginia, a stone's throw from the home of the Stanley Brothers, and who play regionally in southwest Virginia and Kentucky. A group that mixes comedy and music is the VW Boys, made up of Tim White, Larry McPeak, and Dave Vaught, all of whom have spent time in well-known groups. Tim White is also the artist who painted the "Birthplace of Country Music" mural in Bristol, a copy of which is being displayed on the Mall for the Festival.

All of the styles of music discussed above have been around for years, some longer than others. There are also many contemporary bands that have taken Appalachian music in new directions. In the music marketplace, one hears the term "Americana" used to refer to roots-oriented performers, and many younger Americana bands come from Appalachia. Some bands have created new, hybrid styles combining elements of Appalachian music with other styles. Ras Alan and the Lions are a two-person group from Zionville, North Carolina, who perform reggae music and whose lyrics frequently deal with life in the region. The Virginia-based Celtibillies began as a contradance band but gradually started to incorporate sounds from the British Isles into their music, combining them with traditional Appalachian fare.

Incredible music can be found all over Appalachia, but historically there have been certain "hotbeds" that have turned out more than their share of great musicians. In southern Virginia (and spilling over the North Carolina border), the area of Grayson and Carroll counties have been the home to the famous Galax fiddle contest and a spawning ground for many well-known string bands. The most famous of these were the Bogtrotters, who started performing in the 1930s. At the Festival this area is represented by guitarist and guitar-maker Wayne Henderson from Rugby, The New Ballard’s Branch Bogtrotters from Galax, and Doug and Taylor Rorrer from Eden, North Carolina. In southwestern Virginia the area surrounding Norton, Coeburn, and Big Stone Gap has been the home of many historically important bluegrass performers such as the Stanley Brothers and Jim and Jesse McReynolds. The family bluegrass band the O’Quinns, mentioned above, comes from this tradition.

Important music has come from the coalfield regions of Virginia, West Virginia, and Kentucky, especially the area just southeast of Hazard, Kentucky. Music scholar John Cohen visited in 1959 and made recordings that resulted in the landmark Folkways LP, Mountain Music of Kentucky. Cohen recorded legendary musicians Roscoe Holcomb of Daisy and Lee Sexton of Cornettsville. He was also able to document some of the wonderful Baptist congregational singing there. That these traditions still thrive is witnessed by Lee Sexton. Clyde Davenport, a legendary fiddler from Monticello, will also perform at the Festival.

The state of West Virginia has a strong traditional music scene. Yearly events including Augusta and the Vandalia Gathering in Charleston bring musicians together. We have assembled an all-star delegation from the state that includes banjo player Dwight Diller and fiddlers Lester McCumbers and Jake Krack, his 18-year-old student.

Also worth noting for their ballad singing and musical traditions are Buncombe and Madison counties, North Carolina, located just northwest of Asheville. Bruce Greene and Don Pedi from North Carolina and Will Keys from Gray, Tennessee, will be performing at the Festival as well.

Since its founding in 1967, the Smithsonian Folklife Festival has maintained a strong interest in the culture of Appalachia. In 1968, Doc Watson & Family, Jean Ritchie, and Ralph Stanley participated in the Festival; in 1969 Dock Boggs, Maybelle Carter, Bill Monroe & the Monroe Brothers, and Merle Travis were featured. State programs on Kentucky (1973), Virginia (1977), and Tennessee (1986) have been presented on the Mall. Festival co-founder Ralph Rinzler had a great love for the region; besides “discovering” Doc Watson in 1960, Rinzler recorded and produced numerous recordings of Appalachian music and collected and documented Appalachian crafts. He was also responsible for bringing Appalachian musicians to New York and the Newport Folk Festival for concerts. The other Festival co-founder, James Morris, had been the director of the Asheville Folk Festival. It has been a great pleasure to be able to work with our old and new friends in Appalachia to make this program a reality this summer.
APPALACHIAN OCCUPATIONAL MUSIC

TED OSLON

From the earliest days of settlement to recent times, Appalachian people have created music that has overtly evoked their everyday lives. Today, traditional as well as commercial songs and tunes from Appalachia reflect the various ways that the region’s people have made a living—depicting such older trades as hunting, foraging, farming, herding, blacksmithing, and moonshining, and such modern occupations as railroading, coal mining, timbering, and truck driving.

Eighteenth-century British immigrants to Appalachia brought with them some songs about work. For example, “Old Bangum,” a ballad about hunting, evolved from the traditional Scottish ballad “Sir Lionel.”

Old Bangum, he did hunt and ride, Sword and pistol by his side.

Most of the occupation-themed songs that circulated in Appalachia through the end of the 19th century, though, were composed by people residing in the region. After the Civil War, as industrialization expanded across Appalachia, emerging occupations yielded new songs and tunes. Railroads were built into the region to facilitate industrial development, a fact reflected in such traditional Appalachian songs as “Workin’ on the New Railroad”:

I’m workin’ on the new railroad With mud up to my knees.

African Americans began to migrate into Appalachia to find work, and with them they brought their musical traditions and aesthetic sensibilities, which soon intermingled with those of white Appalachians, expanding the region’s collective musical repertoire. African-American songs and tunes composed elsewhere became popular in Appalachia, and blacks working there crafted some enduring songs, including the traditional blues ballad “John Henry,” based on an actual 1872 incident in West Virginia.

Before I let that steam-drill beat me down, I’ll die with this hammer in my hand.

White musicians not only borrowed these songs from African-American musicians but also composed songs and tunes that reflected their own experiences of working on the railroad. In addition, they learned from blacks innovative ways to play the banjo, the guitar, and the harmonica.

As railroads rendered Appalachia more easily accessible to outsiders, other industries—specifically, companies seeking to harvest timber, coal, or minerals—entered the region to extract natural resources. People employed by these industries—both Appalachian natives and newcomers of various ethnicities—endured considerable hardship, and companies often offered meager compensation for workers’ life-endangering labor. People living temporarily in “company towns” made music to entertain themselves, but they also utilized music for mobilizing their communities to achieve positive social change. Whereas few songs or tunes were composed in the short-lived timber camps of Appalachia, coal camps fostered diverse occupation-related musical traditions, a result of the relative stability of the coal industry’s work communities.

The best-known category of coal mining music from Appalachia is the coal mining protest song; such songs criticize (often stridently) the injustices of the capitalist system as well as the coal mine companies’ sometimes blatant disregard for human life and the natural environment. Songwriters from Appalachia who composed classic coal mining protest songs include Aunt Molly Jackson, Sarah Ogan Gunning, Jim Garland, Jean Ritchie, Billy Edd Wheeler, and Hazel Dickens.

These mighty company bosses, They dress in jewels and silk, But my darling blue-eyed baby, She starved to death for milk. —“I Hate the Capitalist System” by Sarah Ogan Gunning Images of Appalachian occupations, communicated through certain songs, have exerted a strong imaginative hold on audiences and musicians outside the region. For example, coal mining, farming, moonshining, and railroading songs, composed or reinterpreted by Appalachian and non-native musicians, continue to influence mainstream America’s view of life in Appalachia.

West Virginia songwriter Carl Rutherford writes about life in the coal mines. Photo by Michael Keller, courtesy Goldenseal Magazine
When Life magazine in its September 1994 special collector's edition on the roots of country music paid tribute to the "100 most important" contributors to country music, it said of Ray Charles that "Charles took back what his people had given." Indeed, people of African descent in the late 1600s gave the South and later Appalachia the banjo, and that instrument, along with the fiddle and the guitar, steel guitar, and other instruments, gave the world country music. The African descendants fashioned the instrument after one often called a banjar, which they and their ancestors had played in various West African countries.

Black Appalachians played the banjo at home and at parties, and musicologists and historians describe their musical styles as reels, jigs, two-steps, and other traditional (now called "country") musical forms of the region. Pictures, photographs, and literature, including "A Banjo Song" and "The Corn-stalk Fiddle" by famed poet Paul Lawrence Dunbar, depict the omnipresence of the banjo and fiddle in black life through the 1800s.

In the early 1900s black people, particularly railroad construction workers, introduced the guitar to the Appalachian Mountains. They were influential directly or indirectly in teaching their musical styles to other artists who helped popularize the music to the world. For instance, the Stewart Brothers taught Sam and Kirk McGee, Lesley Riddle taught the Carter Family, unnamed black household and railroad workers taught Jimmie Rodgers, Arnold Shultz taught Bill Monroe, and Rufe “Tee-Tot” Payne taught Hank Williams.

Dr. Dana Baldwin helped continue black people's Appalachian musical heritage by hosting an annual fiddling and banjo contest in Martinsville, Virginia, from about 1928 to 1954. "Black people would look forward to the fiddlers' convention every year," Virginia fiddler Leonard Bowles says in an essay accompanying the 1978 recording Virginia Traditions: Non-blues Secular Black Music. "They had harp players, piano players, the best buck timing, straight fiddle, and the best banjo." DeFord Bailey brought the region's harp sounds—that is, mouth harp—to the world by serving as a member of the Grand Ole Opry from 1926 to 1941. And many other black artists have gone on to perform and write music spawned from that of black Appalachians.

Among the many who have had important impacts on country music are performers such as Charley Pride, Stoney Edwards, O.B. McClinton, and Linda Martell, who made successful recording careers in country music; singing cowboy Herb Jeffries; Henry Glover, the songwriter, producer, and King Records executive; Huddie Ledbetter (Lead Belly), Otis Blackwell, and Alice Randall, who wrote songs that have become country hits or standards; and a number of R-and-B or soul artists such as Brook Benton, Ivory Joe Hunter, Dobie Gray, and Otis Williams, who followed Charles's lead by recording country albums.

Banjo playing, fiddle playing, yodeling, and other forms of traditional Appalachian musical expression have waned among black Americans who associate the music with the poverty and racism from which they want to escape, but the tradition does continue. Among those keeping it alive are Mike Johnson, a Virginian who has won traditional music contests and yodeling contests around the country; McDonald Craig, who has been yodeling and playing traditional guitar since the 1940s; Cynthia Mae Talley, a rising Nashville songstress; and Tebey, an upstart Canadian artist looking for Nashville stardom beginning with his traditional country single "We Shook Hands (Man to Man)," which debuted in January 2003 on the Billboard country singles chart.

Songster Nat Reese has spent his life playing music in the coal fields of West Virginia. Photo by Michael Keller, courtesy Goldenseal Magazine

Pamela E. Foster is a Nashville scholar on black people in country music. She has written the books My Country and My Country, Too on the subject and teaches journalism at Tennessee State University.
Music is a tradition that has thrived in this part of the country for generations. Photo by Scott Odell, courtesy J. Scott Odell Collection, Archive Center, National Museum of American History

Recently retired from East Tennessee State University as director/professor in the Center for Appalachian Studies and Services, Jean Haskell served two years as the Whisman Appalachian Scholar with the Appalachian Regional Commission in Washington, D.C., and was a visiting professor in the School of Scottish Studies at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. She is general editor of the Encyclopedia of Appalachia and co-curator of the Appalachia program for the 2003 Folklife Festival.

Appalachia, Where Tradition and Technology Thrive

JEAN HASKELL

Someone once said that more is known that is untrue about Appalachia than about any other region of the country. For many people, Appalachia is the homeland of the bumbling “Beverly Hillbillies,” the crazed Deliverance hillbillies, or the cartoon hillbillies of Snuffy Smith and Li’l Abner. It’s a strange place with peculiar people who talk funny, in which none-too-smart, lazy men wear battered hats, tote guns, and make and drink moonshine whiskey, and women are either blonde, buxom, and dumb, or gaunt, toothless grannies with lots of home remedies and recipes for cooking roadkill. These images, created by generations of writers, journalists, filmmakers, comedians, and cartoonists, have shaped popular opinion of Appalachia as home to a culture that is homogeneous, white, poor, ignorant, violent, and unproductive. In truth, Appalachia is not a monolithic culture—and not the one depicted in the stereotypes—but a patchwork quilt of rich traditions that form the vivid patterns of Appalachian experience.

Where and what is Appalachia? Most people would agree that the Appalachian mountain chain that stretches along the eastern quarter of North America forms the core of the region. As one observer says, the mountains are the heart of the region, but the edges get blurry. Definitions of the region have varied over time according to the needs and motives of those doing the defining. Sometimes the region’s geographical boundaries have been limited to “the Southern highlands,” the “Upland South,” or the coal fields of the central part of the mountains; at other times, the definition has been expansive enough to include the mountain chain from Canada through north Georgia and north Alabama. In 1965, when the U.S. Congress created the Appalachian Regional Commission to address economic development and quality-of-life issues in the region, the federal definition of the region came to include the mountainous portions of 13 states, stretching from southern New York to north Mississippi, with 410 counties and a population of over 22 million people.

With so vast an area and so many people, defining the traditional culture of the region becomes as difficult as determining its boundaries. Native Americans, especially the prevalent Cherokee, are indigenous Appalachian people. Their agricultural traditions such as the cultivation of corn and squash, architectural traditions of log construction, and craft traditions such as basketry helped early European settlers adapt to mountain living. Those Anglo-European settlers, largely from England, Scotland, Ireland, and Germany, brought to the mountains a heritage of subsistence farming, house styles, foods such as pork and potatoes, a knowledge of distilling, and a repertoire of stories, fiddle tunes, and ballads. Africans came to the region initially as an enslaved population, bringing with them the memory of what became the banjo and a taste for foods such as okra and many types of greens. Even on the frontier, Appalachia had a diverse culture in which various groups borrowed traditional knowledge from one another to carve out a shared life in the mountain wilderness.

In the 19th and early 20th centuries, industrialization came to the mountains in the form of railroads, coal mining, steel mills, textile plants, and large-scale timbering operations. Each industry developed a lore tell technique, customs, beliefs, food, stories, and songs that added to the cultural mix. The labor force needed for these industries brought newly arrived immigrants from Italy, Poland, Hungary, and elsewhere in Europe and African Americans from the deep South to mix with white mountaineers, all of them living and working in the same communities and learning from one another's cultures. Advances in mass communication such as phonograph records, radio, photography, and film exposed mountain folk to new cultural influences and brought mountain culture to the attention of a national audience.

Contemporary Appalachian life has been enlivened by an influx of refugees such as the Hmong of Southeast Asia, doctors and other professionals from India, and Hispanic agricultural and manufacturing workers from Mexico. and Latin America. They are adding their languages, crafts, customs, musics, and foods to the Appalachian landscape today. At the beginning of the new millennium, electronic communications of all kinds, including the Internet, continue to bring diverse cultures into contact with life in the Appalachian Mountains.

Although Appalachia is not homogeneous, there do seem to be some common traits in the region’s expressive culture. Living in hilly and mountainous terrain has led to ingenious resourcefulness, especially in the use of the region’s rich natural bounty, reliance on close-knit kin and community in a region more rural than urban, powerful and tenacious religious traditions, an ethic of hard work, and an economic history that has produced a fascinating cultural diversity.

While most forms of expressive culture are found throughout the region, some traditions have developed more fully in certain pockets of mountain society. Handmade craft, for example, though widespread in the Appalachian region, has become a hallmark of the western North Carolina mountains. Traditional dance thrives in Cherokee, North Carolina, and in communities of southwest Virginia. Old-time, bluegrass, and traditional country music that are the focus of this Festival program reach all parts of the mountains but seem most vigorous in an area that forms the heart of the Appalachian region in east Tennessee, southwest Virginia, southern West Virginia, eastern Kentucky, western North Carolina, and north Georgia.

Appalachia is a region of cultural contrasts. In its bustling cities such as Pittsburgh, Chattanooga, Asheville, and Charleston, you can listen to the symphony and to an old-time string band; you can watch ballet or flatfoot dancing. Local folks may commute into urban areas to work, but come home to farm a small plot of land. The old, white, family farmhouse may stand empty or be filled with hay beside the modern brick ranch house on the side of the road. Traditional storytellers may gather in a rustic home on the side of a mountain or at the gleaming new International Storytelling Center in Jonesborough, Tennessee. Quilting groups in Appalachia stitch traditional patterns yet also create striking contemporary art pieces. Traditional ballad themes and forms show up in the repertoire of an Appalachian reggae band. Jams and jellies for home use sit side by side with gourmet goodies made from traditional recipes for high-end corporate gifts.

In Appalachia, the region’s rich heritage is not something relegated to books about the past or old recordings or museum displays. Tradition informs everyday life, and innovations on tradition keep heritage alive and dynamic. Heritage provides beautiful harmony for the song of everyday life in Appalachia.
Southern Appalachia has long been identified in the popular imagination with a deep-rooted sense of place, an antique and authentically distressed region that is somehow “more real” than the industrially processed America that surrounds it. That this imagined Appalachia has some deep kernel of truth only encourages both locals and outsiders to pump it full of entertainment calories for the mass market (see Dollywood, Gatlinburg, and Opryland). But the traditional art of storytelling has been an essential part of that truth—a part that has been only mildly susceptible to refinement into cornpone.

While Appalachia didn’t invent the front porch, the country store, the fox- or coon-hunting shack, or the visitors’ parlor, it has perhaps perfected them as forums for family yarns, tall tales, local character tales, or sly refinements of gossip. Nor did Appalachia invent the preacher’s pulpit, yet the art of the Appalachian preacher has preserved with special fervor the rhythmic cadences of Biblical story-singing, just as his excesses have inspired a prodigious supply of preacher jokes.

The mountain districts, only in the past fifty years or so widely breached by roads, satellite dishes, and ski chalets, have also preserved repertoires of ancient wonder tales and story-songs once widespread among rural folk, but only extant now in a few dwindling pockets of the Western world. The Jack Tales that Richard Chase collected in Wise County, Virginia, and Beech Mountain, North Carolina, in the 1930s and 1940s, like the old English and Scottish ballads that Cecil Sharp found there in the ‘teens, are part of a deeply localized but also highly emblematic cultural inheritance. If there were a cultural endangered species act, these pockets would be surrounded by government agents empowered to freeze roads, developments, and tax hikes until the filing of statements of impact on the children of tale-tellers and singers. Since there is not, we have instead had the kaleidoscopic spectacle of folk revivalism riding into Appalachia along the same highways that let the children of Appalachia out. It is no accident that the foundations of the main national storytelling revival organizations, as well as their preeminent National Storytelling Festival, are based in the little Appalachian town of Jonesborough, Tennessee—just a few miles from where the Bristol Sessions began the movement of mountain music into the mainstream.

Ray Hicks was a teller of Jack Tales, handed down through generations in his mountain family. Photo courtesy Smithsonian Institution

Joseph Sobol is the director of the Graduate Program in Storytelling at East Tennessee State University. He is a storyteller, musician, folklorist, and author of The Storytellers’ Journey: An American Revival.
Powwow dancing, frybread, beadwork—these Native American traditions have been visible at the Folklife Festival for years. Tribes from all over the United States have come to the Mall to share their music, stories, beliefs, crafts, and foodways. Beyond these brief public glimpses and behind a thick layer of stereotypes, Native Americans continue to keep alive a rich variety of traditions that sustain them spiritually and define their distinct cultures.

In the eastern United States, the Cherokees dominated all of the southern Appalachian region (140,000 square miles) for more than a thousand years. They identify the place where the first Cherokee man and woman lived—Shining Rock. They recently purchased the legendary, sacred place where the first Cherokee village stood—the mother town, Kituwha. And they still live in this area of the mountains of western North Carolina, on land that they own, held in trust by the federal government.

Although most of the Cherokee nation was removed to Indian Territory on the Trail of Tears in 1838, about a thousand people managed to stay in the east—through legal means, by hiding in the rugged mountains, and by returning from the west. Today the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians numbers about 12,500 people, while the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma tops 200,000. With the United Keetoowah Band of about 15,000, the Cherokees form the second largest tribe in the United States.

Today, the Eastern Cherokee maintain traditions of music, storytelling, dance, foodways, carving, basket-making, beadwork, pottery, blowgun-making, flint-knapping, and more. Their language, which was forbidden by the federal schools for more than half a century, is being revived in classrooms and the community. Cherokee culture is based on seeking balance in the world and embracing harmony. Being in balance means being responsible for one's actions and remembering the good of the whole—the family, the tribe, and the earth.

Cherokee music originally was used for dancing, welcoming visitors, courting, and ceremonies. Instruments included water drums, gourd rattles, turtleshell rattles, and rivercane flutes. Singing was in unison, or with call-and-response for dancing. In the dance traditions, songs were sung by a male leader, who also drummed or shook a rattle. Women provided essential rhythms by wearing turtleshell rattles fastened to the knee while they danced. The introduction of the fiddle in the 18th century led to a strong instrumental music tradition among the Cherokees by 1800. At this time, Christian hymns entered Cherokee musical tradition as well. Today, Cherokee people continue the old, sacred dance traditions unique to their tribe. They also sing gospel music and hymns in English and Cherokee, usually with three-part harmony and accompanied by a guitar, much in the style of the Carter Family, often using shape-note melodies and 19th-century camp meeting hymns. Cherokee people today also do powwow singing and drumming, and play bluegrass, blues, and rock 'n' roll.

Cherokee storytelling traditions retain the rhythms and aesthetic of the ancient folktales, although stories are told mostly in English now. Grandmothers and grandfathers tell stories to youngsters at home and in the community, and some storytellers take their art to audiences around the country. Cherokee stories teach children and remind adults what it means to be Cherokee through the adventures of possum, turtle, deer, and others. The values conveyed provide lessons for being in balance: don’t brag; don’t be quick to anger; think of others; respect the elders, the earth, and yourself. Stories also paint a mythical landscape of little people, monsters, and culture-shaping events that occurred on the real landscape of western North Carolina.

Cherokee foodways also connect people to the land. Cherokee women developed their own genetically unique corn (selu-ya) over centuries of cultivation, and still use it today. They grow the plants they have cultivated for more than a thousand years: corn, several varieties of beans, squash, pumpkins, sunflowers, and gourds. They still gather wild greens: ramps, sochan, creasies, sweet cane, poke, and others. Today, a Cherokee “Indian dinner” includes chicken or wild game, bean bread, greens, hominy, herb tea, and fruit cobbler. Cherokee women invented hominy. They begin by making lye, by running water through hardwood leaves; the corn is then soaked in it until it softens. A special basket is used to rinse the corn, which, after cooking, becomes hominy.

The Eastern Cherokee have relied on tourism for economic development for most of the 20th century. Located at the entrance to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park as well as the Blue Ridge Parkway, the town of Cherokee, North Carolina, welcomes more than ten million visitors annually. A new cultural tourism project, the Cherokee Heritage Trails, takes visitors to Cherokee sites throughout the mountains of North Carolina, Tennessee, and Georgia.
Stack cakes, shuck beans, chicken 'n' dumplings, soup beans, and fried apple pies—significant regional foods of Appalachia. Add biscuits and gravy, fried apples, chow chow, and gritted corn bread, and this food reveals its diverse roots in the cultures of Europe, America, and Africa.

American and Appalachian food has passed through significant periods of history, including Native American, European adaptation, steak and potatoes, new Continental, American regional, and healthy low-fat eras. Long before peanut butter and mayonnaise found a place in Appalachian kitchens, Native Americans hunted black bear, buffalo, elk, and whitetail deer. They gathered hickory nuts, black walnuts, American chestnuts, persimmons, and fox grapes, and they domesticated corn, pumpkin, squash, and beans.

When Americans became fascinated with regional foods in the 1970s, the ingenuity and integrity of Appalachian foodways were well established and deserving of recognition. The Foxfire Book, edited in 1972 by Eliot Wigginton of the Appalachian part of Georgia, was among the first to give wide national attention to Appalachian food including dried green beans or “leather britches,” dried pumpkin, sauerkraut, pickled beets, souse or hog’s head cheese, stew, watermelon pickles, and methods of preserving such as burying, bleaching, drying, distilling, and churning. He also discussed hog killing, smoking, and curing. In addition to the work of cultural historians such as Wigginton, whole communities began organizing street festivals to celebrate regional foods. For example, in 1976 in Pikeville, Kentucky, a group of Shriners came together for Hillbilly Days, a celebration of mountain food and culture. Other communities established days or whole weeks to celebrate sorghum, apples, honey, ramps (a kind of wild garlic), maple syrup, dandelions, bean soup, fried chicken, bourbon, buckwheat, and even squirrels.

One of the popular events at these festivals is making apple butter. With leaves flying in the air and apples falling on the ground, people gather to preserve the fruit and anticipate the smooth tangy spread, sweet spicy sauce, and biscuit topping that is apple butter. Civic groups peel, simmer, and bottle their favorite apples. From the back of a pickup truck, group members stack bushels of fresh apples in their vendor tents. Over small fires and in giant cauldrons, using wood stirrers with handles that may be eight feet long, they simmer the apples, evaporating the water and making a concentrate. The boiling takes days, and stirring must be continuous. Then, the apple butter is packed in pint jars and sold from tents or tables. At other festivals the same community pride is seen as sweet sorghum stems are pressed and evaporated, dry corn is ground and bagged, and ramps are fried and served with dinner rolls and hot beans.

Between these annual community events, mountaineers gather frequently for dinners of home cooking served at homecomings, graveyard reunions, award banquets, club meetings, and church gatherings. A variation of the potluck supper, “dinner on the grounds” follows a morning worship service and gets its name from the fact that food is eaten on the church property on temporary tables, retaining walls, church steps, or any spot that is comfortable enough. Glass- and foil-covered casseroles, Tupperware boxes of raw vegetables or deviled eggs, baskets of bread and dinner rolls, and cake pans and pie plates are arranged on long tables. Guests form a line, wait for a blessing, visit with friends, and then pass along both sides of the tables selecting their favorite foods. Pasta, potato, vegetable, apple, and molded salads are followed by hot vegetables, starches, meats, breads, and pickles. At the end are the desserts—cookies, bars, pies, cakes, and candies—and finally beverages. The specific foods at these events represent the varied ethnic backgrounds of those in the community, whether they are African American, Eastern European, English, German, Hispanic, Italian, Native American, Scots-Irish, or Swiss, all of whom have contributed to the region's food traditions.

Mark F. Sohn, Ph.D., is a Pikeville (Kentucky) College psychology professor, cookbook author, and photographer. His specialty is Appalachian cooking.
Dance is an important part of the life of many communities throughout the Appalachian region. People do all kinds of dancing here—as in the rest of the country—from waltz to hip-hop, from line dancing to swing dancing, from salsa to belly dancing, and from stepping to contra-dancing. Many cultural groups make their home in Appalachia, as they have for at least three hundred years. They all share their dancing and learn from one another. The dancing of people in the region has influenced the development of characteristic Appalachian music, and the music has influenced the dancing.

Old-time square dancing has been popular among African-American, Native American, and European-American people since at least the middle of the 19th century. The most common form in the Southern mountains is a circle for any number of couples. Two couples join together to make the "square" and to dance figures at the direction of a caller. West Virginia and Pennsylvania dancers make a four-couple square instead of a large circle. String band music is the usual accompaniment. Some figures have colorful names like "Cage the Bird."
Dancing in the region has influenced the development of characteristic Appalachian music, and the music has influenced the dancing.

or “Dive for the Oyster.” Each community has its own favorite figures and its own ways of doing them. For example, a figure called “Ocean Wave” in eastern Kentucky is the same as a figure called “Garden Gate” in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. In Carcassonne, Kentucky, one couple makes a square with the second couple in the circle, and then that couple visits the third, and so on around the ring. In Chilhowie, Virginia, the entire circle breaks into squares of two couples for each figure.

Footwork dancing is known in the Appalachian region by many names: clogging, buckdancing, flatfooting, hoedowning, or jigging. African-American, Native American, and European-American footwork styles blended over the centuries to produce kinds of dancing that vary from one community to the next. Quietly rhythmic old-style flatfooting and energetically syncopated old-style buckdancing were spontaneous solo dances to the music of banjo or fiddle or the sound of clapping or patting hands. Bascom Lamar Lunsford’s Asheville Dance and Folk Festival in 1927 inaugurated performance clogging teams, who became flashier as they competed for prizes. Dancers performed square dance figures while they improvised their own special freestyle clogging rhythms. In the 1950s James Kesterson developed precision clogging, with all the dancers doing the same steps simultaneously. In the 1970s the Green Grass Cloggers of North Carolina combined precision clogging with western square dance figures, creating a brand new kind of dancing. These “wild hippie stompers” with their high-kicking style spread clogging literally all over the world; in England and Japan, clogging festivals host dozens of teams.

Cherokee traditional dance has a long history. Often based on the movements of animals such as the bear, beaver, or quail, the dances originally were performed before a hunt, to give thanks to the animal for providing food, clothing, and tools. Today the dances are performed to demonstrate our close connection with the natural environment. The drumbeat accompanying the dances represents the heartbeat, the rhythm of life.

Since the 1840s, people have come from the mainland of Europe—Switzerland, Croatia, Bulgaria, Italy, and Hungary—to live and work in the Appalachian region, bringing their own dance traditions with them. In West Virginia, Croatian and Swiss communities have kept their traditional dance alive for over one hundred and fifty years. The rich heritage of Appalachian dance continues to evolve as Hispanics, Hmong, Indians, Pakistanis, and people of other nationalities make the region their home.
Handicraft has long been associated with the Appalachian region, especially the Southern Appalachians. In the late 19th century, missionary and social service organizations moved outward from more urban, industrialized sections of the United States into the remote “frontier,” a swath of highlands that lay diagonally along the eastern third of the country. A lack of infrastructure—of schools, roads, water, and waste disposal—left the region comparatively impoverished. To some, handicraft appeared as a solution to poverty, if only mountain people could market some of the things they already made to national markets. Some craft workers from outside the region thought that teaching handicraft might expand or improve its production.

So many craft organizations emerged during the decades from 1890 through 1940 that the period is known as the Appalachian Craft Revival. The Hindman and Pine Mountain Settlement Schools and Berea College in Kentucky; the John C. Campbell Folk School, Penland School, and the Southern Highland Craft Guild in North Carolina; the Arrowmont School (Pi Phi Settlement School) in Tennessee; and Hambidge Center (Rabun Studios) in Georgia all have a presence in today’s Appalachian cultural community. But dozens of other craft production centers and schools came and went, leaving a legacy of historical work and traditions that continues to influence Appalachian cultural life today.

While the question of why and how crafts played such an important role in the culture of Appalachia is important, a better question might be why craft-making has persisted and, in fact, flourished in Appalachia. Reasons for this are not accidental: a number of core values of the region are characteristic of craftsmanship as well. A connectedness to the land shows up in the appreciation of the fine grain of wood in a guitar custom built by a master luthier. A resourcefulness (or what some have called a “make-do” attitude) is revealed in the making of a hand-forged knife from a car spring or in piecing a quilt from recycled fabric. An interest in community is evident in the tradition of whittling, a park-bench activity that is more about swapping stories and comparing pocket knives than about carving animals and figures.

Such sense of community inspires makers to share their skill and acquired knowledge with others through today’s schools and guilds. While essential hand traditions like smithing and weaving were made largely obsolete by newer technological processes, their practice as contemporary art forms has been enhanced.

Appalachian craft—with its traditions of refined manual skill, intimacy with natural materials, resourceful use of scarce raw materials, and a community spirit of sharing with others—embodies the spirit that runs through all creative activity.
Appalachian culture seems to have had a special attraction for at least two first ladies, Eleanor Roosevelt and Ellen Axson Wilson. Mrs. Roosevelt visited the White Top Mountain Folk Festival in southwestern Virginia, in 1933; between 1934 and 1942, the White House hosted nine concerts of traditional music and dance. The Coon Creek Girls from Kentucky and a square dance team from western North Carolina directed by Bascom Lamar Lunsford performed in 1939, with Mrs. Roosevelt, the president, and the king and queen of England in attendance. Also present was Mrs. Wilson, who several decades earlier had introduced Appalachian women’s crafts into 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. This essay recounts that story.—Editor

As an artist and a Southerner, Ellen Axson Wilson, wife of President Woodrow Wilson, saw firsthand the expert craftsmanship of Appalachian women during her travels to the North Carolina mountains, and she understood their struggle as artists and wage earners. By decorating the White House with handcrafted fabrics, she focused national attention on the lives, financial needs, and talents of mountain women.

In the first quarter of the 20th century, craft programs and industrial schools were established in southern Appalachia by men and women who recognized the need to provide income and education to an underserved people. The Southern Industrial Educational Association (S.I.E.A.), founded by Alabama native Martha Sawyer Gielow, was organized to help fund Appalachian schools that taught industrial and homemaking skills.

In the spring of 1913 the S.I.E.A. organized a display and sale of handmade mountain crafts at the Southern Commercial Congress Exhibit held in Washington, D.C. The event, called an “Exchange,” had a dual purpose. Money from the sale of the crafts provided financial assistance to mountain women, and the well-attended exhibit offered the S.I.E.A. a chance to publicize its mission and recruit new members in the nation's capital.

As honorary president and vice president of the S.I.E.A., Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Thomas Marshall, wife of the vice president of the United States, visited the craft exhibit frequently. Planning an extensive redecoration of the White House private quarters, Mrs. Wilson decided to use fabrics made by mountain women that were on display at the Exchange in the president's bedroom.

Allie Josephine Mast (1861-1936) of Valle Crucis, North Carolina, wove two rugs for the White House on her grandmother's loom, built in 1820. Mast used natural cotton and dark blue jute for the overshot design called Sun, Moon, and Stars. She wove the rug in strips and stitched them together for the larger rug; a smaller rug was displayed under a writing table next to the fireplace.

Seventy-six-year-old Elmeda McHargue Walker of Flag Pond, Tennessee, wove upholstery fabric in the Double Chariot Wheels pattern with natural cotton and finely spun blue wool. Mrs. Wilson used the fabric to cover three slipper chairs, an armchair, and a chaise longue. It was also made into curtains for two large windows in the rear of the White House. At the family home in Elkin, North Carolina, Elmeda's sister Caroline and sister-in-law Martha spun wool and used indigo dye to color the thread for the yardage.

Mrs. Wilson also chose three baskets and a cream-colored cotton coverlet for the room's Victorian Lincoln bed from the Exchange display. All textiles and baskets for the president's bedroom were purchased with government funds and became the property of the White House. The total cost of the items was $292.16.

When the room decoration was completed in late autumn 1913, the first lady allowed the S.I.E.A. to have Washington photographer Harris Ewing take pictures of it. Two views of the room, selling for five cents each, were reproduced as souvenir postcards. Referring to the color of the blue dye, the caption on the postcard gave the room its lasting name, "The President's Blue Mountain Room at the White House."

While Ellen Wilson was decorating the president's bedroom with traditional crafts, President Wilson introduced his progressive campaign of national reform and internationalism. The room thus reflects two opposing turn-of-the-century American economic and social movements—the establishment of America as a world industrial power and the beginning of the Arts and Crafts Revival, which renewed interest in handicrafts and created a market for them—epitomizing a point in American history that attempted not only to embrace the past, but also to foreshadow the future.
FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

APPALACHIA:
HERITAGE AND HARMONY

Blue Ridge Music Trails
http://www.blueridgemusic.org/

Recordings

Carter Family: Their Complete Victor Recordings. Rounder. (series)

THE BRISTOL SESSIONS

Recordings

TRADITIONAL MOUNTAIN MUSIC ON THE RADIO

APPALACHIAN OCCUPATIONAL MUSIC

Recordings

BLACK APPALCHIAN MUSIC IN THE MOUNTAINS AND BEYOND

<www.musicdish.com/mag/?id=7505>.

Recordings

Riddle, Lesley. Step by Step. Rounder Records CD 0299.

APPALACHIA, WHERE TRADITION AND TECHNOLOGY THRIVE

RELIGION IN APPALACHIA

STORYTELLING IN APPALACHIA: A SENSE OF PLACE

NATIVE AMERICAN TRADITIONS

A TASTE OF APPALACHIA

APPALACHIAN DANCE TRADITIONS: A MULTI-CULTURAL HERITAGE

Spalding, Susan Eike, and Jane Harris Woodside, eds. 1995. Communities in Motion: Dance, Community, and Tradition in America’s Southeast and Beyond. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press.

Viewing

Augusta Heritage Center of Davis and Elkins College. Helvetia: The Swiss of West Virginia. Video documentary.

CRAFTS AND CRAFTSPeople OF THE APPALACHIANS

M A L I F R O M T I M B U K T U T O W A S H I N G T O N

by MARY JO ARNOLDI

and JOHN W. FRANKLIN

T R O M T I M B U K T U T O W A S H I N G T O N is an invitation to think about Mali and her important place in the wider world. Mali’s influence in West Africa and beyond has been felt for centuries. But her regional, continental, and global connections are not just part of the past. From Timbuktu to Washington also speaks to us about Malians’ ongoing interest in actively forging new links worldwide.

Mali is an independent, democratic, culturally diverse, predominantly Muslim nation, formerly part of French West Africa, that sits at an important nexus of West African culture. Many of the country’s ethnic groups extend across her national borders, tying Malians in very real ways to the nations that surround her. While Malian citizenship is a source of great pride, people also remember and honor their family and communities outside the country, seeing themselves as citizens of Africa and the world as well.

Over the past 1,200 years Mali has given birth to powerful empires—Ghana, Mali, and Songhai—who influenced transcended Mali’s current boundaries. In trade or by conquest, many peoples, ideas, and goods passed through these empires, over land and on the Niger River. This great waterway flowing through Mali from its southern border to the edge of the Sahara Desert is a lifeline of the country. Along its entire length, Mali’s farmers grow grains and vegetables on the river’s banks, animals come to drink its water, fishermen cast their nets, and boats carry people and goods to trade. The river has always linked Malians to one another and to areas beyond.

Mali’s famous empires’ embrace of Islam forged links eastward to Egypt and the Arab world. In the 14th century the Malian emperor Mansa Musa made a pilgrimage to Mecca, taking with him a large entourage and scores of camels laden with gold. His arrival in Cairo and later Mecca made quite an impression, according to the chronicles of the day. Muslim scholars and architects from this larger Islamic world returned with him to Mali to take up residence in Timbuktu and the empire's capital city. Today between 80 and 90 percent of Malians are Muslims. Many of them make the annual pilgrimage to Islamic holy sites in Saudi Arabia to renew and reaffirm their faith, and Malian students study at Islamic universities in Morocco, Egypt, and elsewhere.

In the 18th and 19th centuries, the tragedy of the trans-Atlantic slave trade brought Malians west to the Americas by way of the Middle Passage. These men and women carried with them not only their values, aesthetics, and beliefs but also their agricultural and technological expertise. They contributed to the very fabric of American culture, and through their knowledge and labor they helped develop the American economy. Mali's ties to the United States did not end with the abolition of the trans-Atlantic slave trade; in the 20th century, for example, during the two World Wars, Malian soldiers fought alongside the Allied forces in the European and African theaters. Drawing on their experiences, the veterans brought new ideas about liberty and justice back to Mali, and these fed the growing movement for independence from French colonial rule that achieved success in 1960. Mali's commitment to democracy has grown over the last decades, and Mali now stands as an important example of democracy in action for other African nations and the world.

Over the past decades, Malian students have come to study in The Niger River is a vital lifeline in Mali, connecting peoples and communities from the desert in the north to the forest and grasslands in the south. Photo © Shawn Davis

For centuries camels have been the primary means of transporting people and goods across the Sahara. These camels are resting outside a Tuareg camp near Timbuktu. Photo by John Franklin © Smithsonian Institution

Editor's note: In cases where ethnic groups or places are known by different names or spellings in the United States and Mali, both names/spellings are given the first time they are used in an article.

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington is made possible by a partnership with the Government of Mali (Office of the President; Office of the Prime Minister; Malian National Folklife Festival Commission; Ministry of Tourism and Crafts; Ministry of Culture; Ministry of Women, Family, and Youth Affairs; and Ministry of Education), the World Bank, and the U.S. Agency for International Development. Additional supporting organizations include the U.S. Department of State, Africa Society, Corporate Council on Africa, Friends of Mali, the Association of Malians in Washington, and the Peace Corps. universities in the United States, and Americans have gone to study in Mali; these students have maintained bonds with people and institutions in both countries after returning home. Some Malians have immigrated to the United States and have established their families in cities throughout the country, where they also contribute to the cultural and economic vitality of the United States. Like Malians everywhere, Malian Americans retain the memory of Malian history, and they preserve vital ties to families and communities in Mali by sending money home and receiving visitors here, celebrating weddings and births, and mourning the passing of relatives and friends in both countries. In this way, connections between Mali and the United States continue to grow.

Today, more and more American schoolchildren are learning about Malian culture and Mali’s important place in world history. Malian music, which has gained an enthusiastic following worldwide, is being played on American airwaves, and more and more concert tours are coming to the United States. The Internet connects Malians and Americans to one another in new and productive ways, and increasing numbers of Americans are traveling to Mali to learn about Malian history and culture firsthand. Mali welcomes all of these global educational, cultural, and economic exchanges, just as she has in the past.

From Timbuktu to Washington has evolved over five years from a wish and an idea to a fully developed and exciting program of musical performances and cultural activities. Planning was enhanced by the previous relationships, both personal and institutional, between the Smithsonian and Malian cultural institutions and was supported by the Malian government and U.S. agencies in Mali. Malian organizers thoughtfully deliberated about what to share with American visitors and determined how Malian culture in all its diversity should be represented. We would like to recognize the dedication of all of the many Malians who have been involved in bringing their culture to the Smithsonian Folklife Festival. When you have the opportunity to work with colleagues over the years it takes to plan such an event, you share their joys and sorrows, and you are nourished by their energy and commitment. You learn about each other as people. Despite many challenges and distractions, our colleagues remained wholeheartedly engaged in the planning for the Festival, and they always made us feel welcome in Mali.
Mali: A Rich and Diverse Culture

SAMUEL SIDIBÉ

Malian culture, rich and diverse, is rooted in an age-old history. The region that now comprises the Republic of Mali was the cradle of great civilizations, whose fame expanded beyond the African continent at the same time Europe was experiencing a significant decline after the fall of the Roman Empire. For at least a thousand years, the country has been traversed from north to south, east to west by people carrying with them not only products, but also ideas and beliefs. This trans-Saharan trade brought Islam, which has progressively established itself in Mali since the 8th century, particularly in the Saharan and Sahelian zones. The wealth of the Ghana Empire (8th to 11th century), Mali Empire (13th to 15th century), and Songhai Empire (15th to 16th century) attracted the attention of the Muslim and European worlds, whose merchants and intellectuals came to Mali by the hundreds. In the course of these eight centuries, called the Golden Age, Mali made an immeasurable contribution to world history and culture. The brilliance of the University of Timbuktu (Tombouctou), for example, was without equal in all of sub-Saharan Africa. The ancient manuscripts preserved at Timbuktu’s Ahmed Baba Center and in private libraries serve as eloquent witness to the influence of this city from the 15th and 16th centuries on. The Golden Age has also left us with evidence of artistic achievement—especially terra cottas of exceptional quality—that archeological research is gradually revealing.

Today, some fourteen ethnic groups live in the region, each with its own cultural traditions. The Moors (Maures) and Tuaregs are in the Saharan and Sahelian zones to the north. Along the Niger River are the Sonra1, Fulani (Peuls), and Boso (Bozo). A multitude of ethnic groups occupy the south: the Bambara (Bamanan), Malinké (Maninka), Soninké, Bwa, Senufo, Minianka, Khassonké, and Dogon, to name just a few.

These communities can be divided into two main groups according to their means of livelihood. The first group comprises those who are engaged in nomadism: these are the Tuaregs and Moors, goat and camel herders; the Fulani, cattle herders; and the Boso, fishermen. The second group consists of sedentary farmers who cultivate grains: millet, rice, corn, and other products such as cotton and peanuts. Although the Soninké are farmers, they also have been skilled merchants for centuries.

An exceptional cultural and linguistic diversity corresponds to this ethnic diversity. Each group is unique in numerous aspects of life—social and religious customs, art and crafts, traditions of dress, cuisine, and architecture—but they all have in common a social organization consisting of horon (usually translated as “nobility” or “freemen”) and niomakala (“caste members”). Although this stratification has become less pronounced today as a result of urbanization, it remains one of the fundamental characteristics of Malian culture.
The jeli, or griot, are particularly important in Malian culture, especially among the Mandé-speaking ethnic groups. A highly skilled musician who may serve as either praise-singer or acerbic critic, the griot acts as the memory of an oral society, a repository of its political and familial history. The history of the Mali Empire, for example, is essentially known to us today through the accounts of the Mandé griots. The griot is attached to a family or to a political power, whose tradition he conserves and transmits to succeeding generations. As a consequence, the griot also has a significant role to play as an intermediary and negotiator between the different social strata of the ethnic group.

Besides the phenomenon of caste, each person in Malian society, based on age and gender, knows his or her precise role in the life of the community. The elderly are always due respect and obedience, for they have been given wisdom and responsibility through long life experience. Women hold a special position, although it varies among ethnic groups. They are the guardians of tradition. Their daily activities center around domestic tasks—cooking and child care—and certain specific craft activities, such as pottery, are reserved for women who are the wives of blacksmiths. Westerners have occasionally presented Malian women as exploited, subject to all-powerful males, but the reality is more complex. Oral literature and daily experience are full of examples of women who play leading roles in Mali's political and cultural life.

The stratification of society into age groups, particularly through initiation societies, is also the basis for the transmission of knowledge, as well as the foundation of the practice of religious beliefs and rituals.

But make no mistake; Malian society is far from being rigidly hierarchical. The different clans or ethnic groups intermingle through marriage and through sinankuya, a form of alliance deeply rooted in the Malian spirit that helps maintain the peaceful coexistence and friendship between communities and individuals. The groups between which sinankuya exists—Dogon and Boso, for example, or Fulani and blacksmiths (numu)—are obliged to help each other and exchange services; they also can joke with one another in special ways. This kind of relationship is widespread throughout West Africa; it constitutes an effective force for social cohesion that mediates and prevents conflicts between communities.

Malian culture is also characterized by an abundance of arts and crafts, as well as other forms of knowledge and skill. Of particular note is people’s knowledge of their environment and the use of sophisticated herbal medicine that Malians have practiced over the course of centuries. They recognize the therapeutic values of plants and pass this information on from generation to generation. Despite the development of Western medicine—and due in part to the much higher costs of this medicine—traditional healing still plays an important role today.

Malian craftsmanship, one of the most dynamic sectors of the Malian economy, boasts an extraordinary diversity of textiles, wood sculptures, leather goods, works in silver and gold, as the result of an age-old tradition of expertise. This ancient knowledge has given rise to some of the most remarkable artworks on the African continent. Dogon, Bambara, and Senoufo sculptures, among others, are among the masterpieces exhibited in European and American museums. But many of these sculptural traditions, which are largely tied to traditional religious practices, survive today only because of an increasingly strong demand from tourism. Other crafts, like pottery and textile weaving, survive because they are still central and useful in Malians’ lives.

The wealth and diversity of Malian culture are also expressed in contemporary genres; Malian culture has become integrated into the modern world. Artists such as the painter Abdoulaye Konaté and photographers Seydou Keita and Malick Sidibé have achieved international success. Malian film-makers also are very accomplished and well known.

Last but not least, each cultural group has rich and varied musical and dance traditions. Internationally renowned musical artists such as Salif Keita, Oumou Sangaré, and many others have drawn upon these traditions as a source of inspiration.

It should be clear that Malian culture is deeply rooted in the past, and Malians speak of it with great pride. But times are changing. Despite efforts to keep this past alive, Malian culture is being fed today by a multitude of influences. A greater integration of Mali’s cultural communities, through Islam, is tending to erase differences among them. In addition, the impact of television, tourism, and recently the Internet is in the process of creating—especially among the youth—the emergence of a world culture, whose arrival the older generations view with a degree of concern.

† These terms are difficult to translate, and the phenomena they describe are complex. Horon comprise the nobles and all freemen with no manual profession other than agriculture. Niamakala are mainly occupational specialist groups, such as griot and blacksmiths. The caste system is essentially based on occupation and endogamy.
Mali occupies a special place in African history. The very name Mali evokes in the African consciousness a period known as the Golden Age, when three great empires, whose fame spread far beyond their borders, ruled over the whole of West Africa. These empires—Ghana (8th to 11th century), Mali (13th to 15th century), and Songhai (15th to 16th century)—were among the first states in sub-Saharan Africa. Much of what we know about them comes from oral tradition, Arabic manuscripts, and archaeological evidence.

Trans-Saharan trade made these empires prosperous, and, in turn, the political dominance of these states provided the stability and security necessary for the trade to thrive. Gold, the commodity most sought in North Africa, was found in abundance in West Africa and formed the basis of the commerce. Also important was salt, mined in the Sahara, and a number of cities arose on the southern edge of the desert to serve as centers for trade between the Arab-Berber world and black Africa—among them Timbuktu (Tombouctou) and Djenné.

Ruled by kings with relatively centralized authority, these empires also boasted a rich culture. During the Songhai Empire in particular, Timbuktu and Djenné became centers of scholarship as well as trade. Ancient chronicles heap praise on the depth of scholars' knowledge in these cities, in law, poetry, astrology, and other fields. Universities developed around the mosques and drew students from around the Islamic world. First introduced during the Ghana Empire, Islam became more influential during the Mali Empire, founded by Sundiata Keita. Kankan Moussa, also known as Mansa Musa (mansa is a title meaning “king of kings”), expanded the empire's territory significantly but is perhaps best known for his pilgrimage to Mecca in 1324. He carried so much gold with him and gave such a quantity away when he stopped en route in Cairo that the gold market collapsed. It would take years to recover.

In 1591 the sultan of Morocco attacked a Songhai Empire that had been weakened by internal warfare and a series of natural disasters and famines. The opening of sea trade by the Portuguese also favored coastal regions over the overland trade routes that had supported the empire. These factors, in combination with the Moroccans' superior firepower, brought a halt to the economic and intellectual achievements that had characterized the Golden Age.

A succession of smaller kingdoms, among them the Bambara (Bamanan) kingdoms of Ségou and Kaarta, attempted to fill the vacuum. Ségou was founded at the beginning of the 18th century. Its first king, Biton Coulibaly, was an autocrat supported by an extremely loyal army, the Tonjon. A Tonjon leader founded the second Ségou dynasty, the Diarra. Kaarta consisted of rival Bambara clans and was often at war with Ségou. In 1818 a Fulani (Peul) state called the Dina began to sap power from Ségou. A force for Islamic renewal and for a Fulani renaissance in the interior Niger Delta, the Dina established a remarkable socio-economic organization that reconciled the interests of Fulani herdsmen, Boso (Bozo) fishermen, and Bambara farmers. But both empires were taken over in the mid-1800s by El Hadj Omar Tall, a Tukulor Muslim cleric who had launched a holy war to conquer and convert the people of the western Sudan to his Islamic brotherhood. The theocratic state that resulted from this holy war extended across an extremely vast territory that was difficult to control; it also faced resistance from the Bambara and Fulani, and was threatened by French colonial troops bent on continuing their advance into the interior of the Sudan.

Although the first European contact with West Africa dates to the 15th century, explorers' expeditions of the 18th and 19th centuries provided (intentionally or not) the geographic information that led to the development of strategies for colonial conquest. The instability and conflicts between the various states and groups during the same period played into the hands of France, which already was influential in the region. The French governor of Senegal in the 1850s-1860s, Faidherbe, wanted to extend French commercial and political influence in Africa from the Atlantic to the Red Sea. The 1887 Treaty of Gouri made the Ségou Tukulor Empire a French protectorate. Annexation of other West African lands followed, and by the turn of the century all of what is now Mali was part of French West Africa. (French West Africa itself comprised eight colonies; in 1919 the colony that included Mali was named French Sudan.) West Africa was dismembered time and again at the whim of colonial interests, and capitals were moved as the borders of the new divisions changed.

Archeological research shows that Mali has been inhabited since Paleolithic times. Humans occupied the Malian Sahara between 30,000 and 20,000 B.C.E. Evidence of this ancient population can be seen in the south and center of the country as well, notably at the site at Oundjougou in Dogon country.

Human presence in Mali in the Neolithic age fluctuated depending on the periods of rain and aridity. This age is represented especially by cliff dwellings with engravings and wall paintings in different parts of the country, as well as a stoneworking workshop at Magnambougou, near Bamako, and at the Neolithic site at Kobadi in the Mèma, near the Niger bend.

During the millennium before the Common Era, metals appeared in Mali, and metallurgy led to a spectacular increase in the establishment of cities, with the oldest yet discovered being Dia and Jenné-Jeno. The wealth of cities and the rise of craft trades led to the development of commerce, in turn making it necessary to control the cities and surrounding areas to protect this commerce: this marked the birth of states. The first state, the Ghana Empire, was founded in the cities of Kumbi Saleh and Tegdaoust at the beginning of the 8th century. The introduction of Islam at about the same time is most clearly evidenced in the archaeological record by the inscriptions on tombs in the ancient city of Gao (Gao-Sané). Islamization, which spanned several centuries, has left the largest number of archaeological remains in all areas of the country, including inhabited sites, funerary monuments (burial caves, funeral urns, crypts, and burial mounds), shops for smelting and ironwork, ceramics, metal and terra cotta figurines (including the famous Djenné figurines), and evidence of warfare.

Kléna Sanogo is General Director of the Institute of Human Sciences in Bamako.
Mosques often serve as centers for daily life in communities throughout Mali. Photo © Baba Alpha Cissé

Many jeliw (griots) are highly skilled musicians and are the repositories of political and family histories. Here a griot plays the kora, a 21-stringed lute. Photo © National Museum of Mali

The French had hardly been welcomed with open arms. The Tukulors, the Wassoulou Empire founded by Samory Touré, the Kénédougou kingdom in the south, and others mounted powerful and sustained—though ultimately unsuccessful—resistance to French occupation. Samory fought the French for 18 years with such skill that French military leaders referred to him as the “Black Napoleon.” After the French took control, the northern Tuareg, the Bambara of the Bélédougou region, and the Hamallists (a Muslim sect from the west) openly opposed them as well.

During almost three-quarters of a century of colonial rule, the French seized natural resources, imposed forced labor, levied heavy taxes, and implanted Christianity. They also introduced a new education system, and this had the unintended consequence of producing an intellectual elite that aspired to political freedom. By the late 1930s the elite had formed a number of “voluntary associations,” and in these years trade unions were also established, one of the first of them the teachers’ union founded by Mamadou Konaté. These groups were not yet political parties, but they provided forums at which social, economic, and political concerns could be discussed.

Political parties did emerge in 1945, in elections for the First Constituent Assembly of the Fourth (French) Republic. One party led by Mamadou Konaté, the Union Soudanaise, was affiliated with the Pan-African Rassemblement Démocratique Africain (RDA), created in 1946. The Union Soudanaise gained increasing popularity in subsequent elections, and Konaté became the country’s leading political figure. After his death in 1956, Modibo Keita, the co-founder of the Union Soudanaise, assumed leadership of the party.

In 1958 French West Africa was dissolved; the colonies held referenda to choose between political autonomy and complete independence from France. Mali at the time voted for autonomy. In an effort to promote the idea of African unity—largely stymied, despite the postwar efforts of African political leaders, by the number of separate political entities the French had carved out of West Africa—Keita joined with Léopold Sédar Senghor of Senegal in June 1960 to form the Mali Federation. But the federation foundered over basic policy differences between the partners and collapsed in August. Finally, the former colony of French Sudan declared its independence on September 22, 1960, and reclaimed for its own the historic and glorious name of Mali.
Mali Today: Land, Society, People

BINTOU SANANKOUA

Crossroads of civilizations, center of three great empires, at the forefront of Africa's democracies, Mali is the largest country in West Africa, covering an area of 1.24 million square kilometers (approximately 479,000 square miles). It is located in the Saharan and Sahelian climatic zones, with desert in the north and, to the south, plateaus, savanna, and flood plains. Fed by two major rivers, the Niger and the Senegal, it is landlocked, surrounded by seven countries. Mali's geographic location and its dynamic history have predisposed it to play an important role in promoting African unity. Indeed, Mali's constitution is committed to achieving this ultimate goal.

Bamako, the capital, is a city of about a million and a half inhabitants. Of Mali's total population of over 11 million, 65 percent are under the age of 25, and 20 percent under the age of 5. Mali faces a great challenge in providing education and future employment for its youth.

Bamanan is the language spoken by the vast majority of Malians, and it coexists with twelve other national languages including Fula, Sonra'i, Dogon, Tamasheq, Senufo, and Bobo. Studies are under way to include the national languages more systematically in the academic curricula alongside French, which is the country's official language.

The traditional stratification of Mali's ethnic communities according to their occupations has become less pronounced in recent times. Men and women from different ethnic groups more frequently intermarry today, and this process has been accelerated by the increasing formal education of children, rising urbanization, and the nation's democratization.

Eighty to 90 percent of Mali's population is Muslim. Muslims practice a tolerant form of Islamic tradition and belong to numerous religious brotherhoods, such as the qadiri, tijani, and wahhabites. The Malian Muslims also live in peace with Christians and those who practice traditional religions, who number 10 to 20 percent of the population. Religious diversity is a source of cultural enrichment. For example, recent mosque architecture reflects Middle Eastern, not only local, styles. Once rare and inconspicuous in Mali, new churches, above all Protestant ones, are appearing here and there throughout the country. These Muslim and Christian houses of worship connect Mali to the architectural traditions beyond its own borders in religious centers worldwide.

Mali is now a healthy, secular, multiparty democracy, but Malians have paid dearly for their freedom. In March 1991, a popular revolution, supported by the army, overthrew a dictatorship and instated political pluralism after a three-decade reign by a single party. The 1992
A couple registers their marriage at the mayor’s office in a civil marriage ceremony. Many couples celebrate both religious and civil ceremonies, which often take place the same day. Photos © National Museum of Mali

The constitution brought about the Third Republic, granted all fundamental liberties, and guaranteed the separation of powers. Today, there are more than 50 political parties, evidence of the desire of Malians to celebrate their hard-earned freedom. Multiparty elections have taken place since 1991. The current head of state, elected in 2002, is Amadou Toumani Touré.

Mali has one of the freest presses in Africa, confirming its dedication to democratic ideals. Malians can choose from over 30 daily, weekly, monthly, bi-monthly, or quarterly newspapers on a whole range of subjects, from general information to sports or culture. And Mali has without question the freest radio in all of Africa. A hundred or so stations broadcast throughout the country through rural radio and the national radio to inform, educate, and entertain Malians.

Economically, Mali is also turning around. The state is gradually disengaging from the key economic sectors, either because they were poorly managed or in the hope of more efficiently developing resources. Mali’s lack of access to the sea, the aftermath of a colonial economy, and the effects of seasonal droughts since 1972 have seriously handicapped economic development. However, the government has outlined a strategy of accelerated growth projected for 2010, and a strategy to fight poverty.

With irrigation and more efficient tapping of the rivers, modern agriculture is developing alongside the traditional subsistence agriculture. Mali is the largest cotton producer in sub-Saharan Africa; cotton cultivation presently comprises 10 percent of the GNP and 58 percent of export revenues. Animal husbandry also makes an important contribution to the GNP; it provides herders with 80 percent of their annual income and has significant potential for development. Mali is the third largest gold producer in Africa, and American companies participate in the exploration and development of mines in Mali. Besides gold, other mineral reserves promise an industrial future for Mali, such as phosphate, marble, kaolin, and several others as yet undeveloped.

Tourism also has a bright future in Mali. Djenné, her sister city Timbuktu (Tombouctou), and the Dogon Natural and Cultural Sanctuary have been designated World Heritage Sites by UNESCO. Every region of the country has riches to offer: waterfalls, wildlife, architecture, and music festivals, to mention only a few. Aware of the economic benefits as well as the negative environmental and cultural impacts of tourism, Mali designed a master plan in 1988 to develop its resources for tourism in a responsible, intelligent, and coherent way; this includes greater involvement by local populations in decision-making and the management of their natural and cultural heritage.
Malian Traditional Music: Sounds Full of Meaning

SALIA MALÉ

Traditional music is a vibrant expression of Mali's cultural diversity and wealth. Each ethnic group and region is characterized by certain musical rhythms, instruments, and compositions. Music is involved in all aspects of life, marking birth, work, marriage, religious ceremonies, and death.

For the Malian people, music is fundamental and essential to life: it has a precise function and meaning, and it is inextricably linked to a set of doctrines, ideals, beliefs, and practices whose coherence constitutes the identity of each group. Since beliefs about music are often associated with beliefs about the origin of both music and the ethnic group that performs it, the perpetuation of music is a matter of considerable importance.

In order to fulfill its functions as revelation, meaning, and source of pleasure, Malian traditional music teaches about real society and its problems. Songs describe customs and morals, represent people of different social strata, and use either indigenous or imported linguistic and artistic forms. In this way, songs reflect the social and cultural conditions of a moment in history.

It is this reflection of society that typifies traditional Malian music, to such an extent that its performance is never gratuitous. Whether it aims to capture the relation between humans and the divine, to recount the course of natural or social events, or simply to convey the mood of its producers and its recipients, it always has consequences, for “nothing can be sung or played that does not contain something.”

Hunters' music (donso n'goni) is a popular musical form found in the south of Mali and also in Guinea, Senegal, Niger, Ivory Coast, and...
Burkina Faso. It is played on different occasions connected to the hunters’ lives, at home or in the bush: the burial and funerals of great hunters, entry into the village of large game trophies, festivals of the hunters’ brotherhood, baptism of the child of a member of the brotherhood, welcome of officials, and every other form of hunters’ gatherings. These occasions bring into the open relations with occult forces, the magical powers between hunters and between musicians and hunters; they are high-stakes musical events whose outcome is not known in advance. The most dangerous tests of magic and miracle-working are performed to the sounds of specific music. The donso n’goni singer evokes a summoned hunter’s exploits while exhorting him to further feats; the hunter is tempted to accomplish them on the spot, by making wild animals appear and killing them. If he does not succeed in this, the hunter promises the singer the thigh, shoulder, or tail of an animal that he will go out and kill the next day, week, or month. These public exchanges between the musician and the hunter are touching: the musician recalls to the hunter his past exploits, the hunter alternately recognizes his accomplishments and the challenge to honor the new promise that the situation has incited him to make.

Xylophone (balafon) music is another very popular genre throughout southern Mali. Accompanied by the kora (21-string chordophone), jembe (large drum), or other drum, it is played for baptisms, marriages, and popular musical evenings whose sole purpose is entertainment. It is played as well at annual festivals for village agricultural associations. These are grand moments of gathering and celebration for young boys and girls from a village or group of villages. Xylophone playing also lends itself well to dance contests.

Takamba music is a popular musical genre from the north of Mali. Men and women, seated or standing, dance to it at baptisms, marriages, and popular celebrations. The dance is characterized by graceful movements performed with the hands, eyes, and body, and augmented by richly embroidered grands boubous.

The primary value of music lies not only in its harmony in musical terms, as pleasing sound, but also and especially in its relation to life. For Malians, this latter function of music often takes precedence. The saying “It is not the song that is good, it is its meaning that is good” eloquently encapsulates this thought.
Modern Music in Mali

MAMOUTOU KEITA

Mali is known throughout the world for the dynamism of its culture and the wealth of its musical patrimony. Stars of international renown such as Salif Keita, Ali Farka Touré (right), Oumou Sangaré (below), Habib Koita, and others have made Mali a flourishing seedbed for music. Over two thousand Malian musicians have recorded at least one album, thus providing radio stations and the national television station with abundant material for locally produced programs. The Malian government itself sponsors several modern bands as well.

Modern music is played with Western instruments such as the guitar, the piano, and the accordion, which made their way to Mali during the colonial era. In the colonial African army, soldiers formed musical groups called “Gobbies.” After their demobilization, the conscripts—inspired by the music—returned home with old guitars and accordions and formed their own bands. All the cities in Mali with military barracks had one or two bands.

The repertoire of these first bands consisted of Western classics such as waltzes, marches, and rock, played on brass, wind, and percussion instruments. The wild popularity of rock obliged African musicians to adopt the electric guitar, which in turn enhanced the bands’ technical possibilities. A few years after Mali’s independence in 1960, the new cultural orientation of the government dictated that bands adapt the country’s musical heritage to modern instruments.

It was the boom era for modern bands in Mali. In addition to the national ensemble, almost every neighborhood and school had its own small band. Among them were Pionnier Jazz, Askia Jazz, L.T. Band, and the Orchestre du Lycée des Jeunes Filles. Every major city also had a musical ensemble. The best musicians of a particular region formed a regional group. The decade of 1970 to 1980 marked the heyday of the “band era,” with such giants as the Ambassadeurs du Motel, the Rail Band, the Las Maravelas del Mali (now Badema National), the Bilon of Segou, the Kanaga of Mopti, the Kéné-Star of Sikasso, and the Mystère Jazz of Timbuktu.

With the advent of democracy, regional and local groups, which were all sponsored by the government, slowly disappeared and were replaced by numerous independent bands. This new freedom allowed many young talents to blossom, and made possible the exportation and profitability of Malian music. Today, music is Mali’s third most important export commodity after gold and cotton. Albums by stars such as Toumani Diabaté, Oumou Sangaré, Salif Keita, Ali Farka Touré, Kar... Kar, Rokia Traoré, Abdoulaye Diabaté, and Neba Solo are sold all around the world, making Mali a major center of the international entertainment industry.

Malian music has thus moved beyond the traditional to embrace the global. Reggae, rap, and hip-hop have become the genres that have attracted youth, because through these they can express their concerns about such social problems as unemployment, pollution, and corruption. Mali also now has a music video industry, with “Top Etoile,” a nationally televised music show, as its outlet.

Today, music is no longer the preserve of griots; the profession is now open to all those who have the talent and perseverance, making Malian music a synthesis of melodies, rhythms, and tempos—the very stuff of a multiethnic culture.

Mamoutou Keita is a Cultural Publicist at the Maison des Jeunes.
Malian crafts are a legacy from the past but also very much a part of the present—and the future.

People generally think of crafts as the artistic expression of a civilization or culture, but they are much more. Crafts are an important economic resource for Malians, and in 1995 the government adopted a Craft Code to protect and develop craft activity, which the code defined as all basically manual extraction, transformation, or production of goods or services, in metalwork (such as tool-making and appliance repair), woodwork (from carpentry to paper-making), textile and leather work (such as tailoring and tanning), mining and building trades, food processing and preparation (from meat-cutting to milling grain), health and body care (from hairdressing to incense-making), as well as arts. Crafts encompass not only objects used in rituals and traditional ceremonies, but also objects used in daily life.

Craft production requires smaller-scale investment than other sectors of the economy, and this is an advantage for a country like Mali where investment capital is scarce. Nearly 60 percent of the Malian workforce is employed in craft production, which creates many jobs and contributes 15 percent of the GNP. In rural areas as well as cities, the production of crafts has a ripple effect on income and thus plays an important role in fighting poverty. Profits from the sale of crafts contribute to the improvement of the artisans’ living conditions and are a source of income for the country. Craft businesses broaden and improve skills, especially among women and youth. They allow marginalized groups, such as lepers, to earn a living by working. Crafts help to develop human, economic, and financial resources, while at the same time serving to promote tourism and commerce.

The durability of the crafts sector has always been assured by the role it plays in social and cultural life. Religious celebrations, family ceremonies, customs of dress, and culinary traditions all illustrate how inseparable and mutually reinforcing are Malians’ daily lives and their craft heritage. Each generation of artisans has added its signature to the historical legacy of Malian craftsmanship, enriching it further. Including craft production in Mali’s development strategy will considerably reduce poverty and contribute to Mali’s socioeconomic success.

(Top) Nakunté Diarra of Kolokani uses a bamboo stick to apply the mud design on a cotton cloth. Photo © Tavy Aherne
(Top right) Nacani Kante makes a pottery vessel. Photo © Barbara Frank
(Left) Tuareg leather workers display their crafts in Timbuktu (Tombouctou). Photo © Baba Alpha Cissé

Maiga Oumou Maiga is Director of the Centre National de Promotion de l’Artisanat (CNPA).
Malian Textiles

MOUSSA KONATÉ

Mali’s long weaving tradition has given rise to a wide variety of textiles that are particular to communities or regions, are used by people throughout the country, and, in recent years, have become popular around the world. Malian textiles began to be traded in the 11th century, although, as archaeological evidence reveals, they existed far earlier.

Weaving, traditionally a man’s craft in Mali, is based on the processing of cotton and wool; the use of one or the other in a region depends on the climate and local people’s knowledge. Wool weaving is a specialty of Fulani (Peul) weavers, the Maabube, who are a specialist “caste.” (Among other groups in Mali who work primarily in cotton, weaving as a profession is not restricted to a particular “caste.” See p. 43.) They create utilitarian wool weavings called kaasa; of these, the most valued for their softness are made from the wool of young sheep. Kaasas can be used as blankets, which are generally white, and for clothing, such as shepherds’ tunics (boubous), which are most popular in black. Arkilajii are large blankets or hangings made of strips of wool or a combination of wool and cotton with motifs like the moon, stars, and animals, which convey humans’ relationship with nature. One of the most prestigious weavings in Mali is the Fulani arkila kerka, a specialty of the Maabube, which generally serves as mosquito covering for the nuptial chamber. An arkila kerka takes about a month and a half to make. The weaver moves into the household of the family that commissions the textile, and together they come up with the design. The arkila jango is the main item of marriage trousseaus for Tuareg girls; hung around a tent, it offers protection against the cold, wind, and sand.

Cotton textiles seem to be the oldest in Mali and the most widespread throughout the country. They are used as coverings, pagnes (wrappers), other articles of clothing, and as offerings and during rites of passage in rural areas. Cotton was introduced to Mali as a cash crop at the beginning of the 20th century by the French, to reduce their dependence on U.S. and British cotton. The first efforts to cultivate cotton as a cash crop took place in 1907 in the region of the interior Niger Delta, but it only became really viable beginning in 1935.

Although men shear the sheep and harvest the cotton, many of the subsequent tasks involved in processing raw wool and cotton are performed by women. Women comb raw wool by hand and card raw cotton. Spinning is a women’s activity as well, traditionally providing an occasion for women to tell stories and proverbs to one another as they work. Both men and women make the woven cloth strips (bandes) that are sewn together to make textiles. A black strip, for example, protects against illness and would be put in men’s garments in places where he is

A woman vendor in Bamako’s bustling textile market displays her resist-dyed cloth. Photo © National Museum of Mali

Moussa Konaté, an anthropologist, is Technical Counselor at the Malian Ministry of Culture.

The author acknowledges Mille tisserands en quête de futur by Aminata Dramane Traoré (Bamako: Editions EDIM, 1999), on which much of this article is based.
vulnerable (chest, spine). Pagnes have seven strips, kaasas have six; piecing them together can be time-consuming and demanding work. Men and women embroider fabrics and tailor garments. Women dye the fabrics, and men polish them. Most fabrics except fine, handwoven cotton are polished to give them the desired sheen. Polishing is accomplished by beating the fabric with wood mallets and is hard work.

Natural dyes are made from roots, leaves, flowers, bark, and clay; indigo is cultivated, and indigo-dyed cloths are very highly valued. Bogolan, known as mudcloth, uses various plant dyes and clay. Until recently the specialized knowledge of making bogolan was possessed by the Bambara (Bamanan), Malinké (Maninka), Bwa, Dogon, Senufo, and Minianka; now it is claimed by many other groups. The process involves applying mud on cloth, leaving the pattern bare—that is, the mud design is painted on as the background, and the motif appears in the areas without mud. Indigo-dyeing developed in West Africa and especially Mali at the same time as cotton weaving; textiles found in the cliffs of Bandiagara (from the Tellem culture, 11th-15th centuries) contain thread dyed with indigo. Soninké women are most famous for indigo-dyeing.

At the point textiles are made into clothes, they assume a dual function: protecting the body and conferring a status on the individual. Malians, and Africans in general, are careful not to let an article of clothing that has been worn fall in the hands of someone who wishes the wearer ill; sorcerers can get to the person through any object that has had contact with his or her body. Textiles are intimately connected to the existence of those who wear them.

Islam and exchanges with the Maghreb, which increased between the 11th and 16th centuries, influenced to varying degrees the clothing fashions of different ethnic groups in Mali: large tunics, baggy pants, caps, turbans, and babouches (slippers). The way one dresses depends on one's age, gender, social status, and religion. The boubou marks the passage to adulthood; notables add to the boubou a shawl on the shoulder (turning it into a grand boubou). The quantity of material, quality of weaving, length of the garment, and ornamentation specify the socioeconomic status or religion of the wearer.

Traditionally craft trades had a sacred or magical character because they transformed material; "the artisan pursued the work of God...who, in creating the earth, left certain actions unfinished." Knowledge was transmitted from generation to generation according to precise rituals. However, handweaving and the crafts associated with it have gone into a steady decline as industrially produced waxprints and roller-print cotton textiles have become increasingly available. These textiles, which come from Europe, Africa, and Mali's own factories, are loomed in wider widths and are more easily cut and tailored. Workshops where clothes are sewn by machine have little incentive to promote traditional textiles, because the styles of clothing the workshops produce come from outside Mali, some from imported catalogues, and change annually. In addition, the thickness of traditional fabrics does not lend itself well to the newer fashions that both rural and urban women desire. The growing use of industrially produced thread has been accompanied by the discontinued manufacture of the carders rural women depended on to comb cotton. Contemporary weavers also face challenges in obtaining sufficient supplies of quality wool and cotton. Droughts have affected sheep's diets, and in turn their coats, and most raw cotton is exported. Another factor in the quality of production enters in when textiles are made for the marketplace rather than commissioned by a family according to its specifications and for its use. In this case, since a family's decorative needs play no role in planning and evaluating the design and the work, the motifs may be less tightly woven, or the weaver may use chemical dyes and industrial thread to save time. Some weavers who have moved to the cities have been unable to make a living there and have been forced to abandon their craft.

But the future for Malian textiles and craftspeople is far from bleak. A renewed interest among Malians and others in handwoven cotton textiles, especially bogolan, could be an impetus for reviving the handweaving industry. Chris Seydou, an internationally successful fashion designer (1949–94), introduced bogolan into haute couture, and his contribution was decisive in the revalorization of African textiles. Traditional hand embroiderers, centered in Timbuktu (Tombouctou) and Djenné, along with Gao and Bamako, have retained their prestige because of the antiquity of their craft, complexity of the work, and great beauty of the finished garments. In cities weaving and dyeing have become open to more groups. Urban weavers adapt pagnes and coverings for use as decorations in people’s homes. The production of textiles in urban areas also is characterized by the use of chemical dyes applied to basin (damask). This flourishing industry has resulted in the making of boubous that have become one of the hallmarks of Malian identity.

Textiles and dress are not just functional but are basic to individual and collective identity. Once considered prestigious possessions, for dignitaries and royalty, textiles today can provide a way for all Malians to assert their heritage, and craft the way the world sees them.

(Facing page) A vendor sells stenciled mud-dyed cloth. Stenciled cloths are faster to produce and less expensive to buy than the handpainted mudcloths. Photo © Shawn Davis

(Below) This Dogon weaver is working on a cotton strip. Five or more of these strips will later be sewn together to make a complete cloth. Photo by John Franklin © Smithsonian Institution

Mali on Smithsonian Folkways Recordings

“One of the most striking aspects of Malian music today is the way it blurs the distinction between traditional and modern music….Malian musicians are renowned improvisers, and their willingness to experiment and to extend into new areas has led to a proliferation of hybrid genres. Older sounds and forms are constantly reinvented. As participants in a living musical tradition, today’s Malian musicians have listened to the world.” —from the liner notes by Banning Eyre to Mali Lolo! Stars of Mali (Smithsonian Folkways Recordings SFW CD 40508).

Today’s world is listening to Mali’s musicians. The striking sounds of contemporary Malian music both honor the unique essence of Mali’s culturally diverse population and boast a boldness to create new ways of expressing that essence. Many would say that this embrace of both continuity and creation equally is precisely the reason for the striking international popularity of Malian musicians.

Mali Lolo! Stars of Mali, produced by Smithsonian Global Sound director Jon Kertzer especially for the 2003 Smithsonian Folklife Festival, is an audio group portrait of leading Malian musicians of today. Sixteen tracks profile Oumou Sangaré, Kasse Mady Diabaté, Ali Farka Touré, Habib Koité, Lobi Traoré, and many others beyond those appearing at the Festival in a rare anthology of contemporary Malian sounds.

To purchase Mali Lolo! Stars of Mali, visit the Festival Marketplace or the Smithsonian Folkways Recordings Web site, www.folkways.si.edu.
MALIAN ARCHITECTURE

LASSANA CISSE

Architecture is an essential part of Mali’s heritage. Its forms are very diverse, corresponding to the varied needs of those who build and use the structures, but essentially there are three building traditions: earthen, stone, and nomadic architecture.

Widespread in Africa, earthen architecture is a construction technique that encloses spaces with walls. Besides adobe brick, construction also makes use of wood and some other plant material. Such architecture can be found in cities as well as in rural areas. Urban examples include Djenné’s famous mosque and decorated houses, as well as the mausoleums and medieval mosques of Timbuktu (Tombouctou). Rural architecture is also remarkable for its impressive earthen constructions: the saho (youth houses) of the interior Niger Delta, for example, are made from clay soil mixed with straw and feature façades with rich decorative elements. Traditional houses typical of the south of the country are also made from clay and straw.

Stonemasonry is currently practiced in Dogon country. Before the arrival of the Dogon in the 15th century, the pre-Tellem (3rd–2nd century B.C.E.) and Tellem (11th century C.E.) peoples developed an exceptional clay architecture for their cliffside storage buildings. At the heart of Dogon architecture, the home (gin’na) is the most imposing structure. In certain areas, residential compounds are laid out in a form that symbolizes the human body. The façades of houses are hollowed out with rows of small niches. Storage buildings, their roofs covered by removable straw lids, are built in an exterior court in front of the house. Totemic sanctuaries (binu) are composed of small units with a façade that is flanked by small towers or conical protrusions, which serve as altars. The men's lodges (toguna) are built according to completely different principles: carved wooden or stone pillars are placed in a square arrangement. They support a bed of tree trunks, on which millet stalks are stacked in alternately perpendicular levels.

Nomadic architecture, used in the Sahara and Sahel by groups of herders that move seasonally to new pastures (such as the Fulani [Peul], Tuareg, and Moors [Maures]) and by fishing groups along the length of major waterways, is based on the construction of frameworks. The round house and tent are its characteristic forms. Round houses made from branches are constructed from a wooden framework and are covered with straw mats, or even plastic sheeting. The tent, made either from skins or fabric, is also stretched across a wooden armature whose contours give it its shape.

Housing varies according to region, environment, and ethnic group, but overall one sees the sub-Saharan, Sudanic, Dogon, and colonial styles based on older mud architecture represented in Mali. Modern housing in cities and the countryside bears the stamp of these different architectural traditions.

(Above) The Djenné mosque, the largest earthen building in the world, in the midst of remudding. Photo © Allison Mackey

(Below left) A toguna, or men’s lodge, in a Dogon community. Photo © Baba Alpha Cissé

(Below center) A Tuareg woman and her child in front of their tent. Photo © Baba Alpha Cissé

(Below right) A former colonial building in Ségou whose style is based on vernacular mud architecture. Photo © Barbara Frank Lassana Cissé is head of the Cultural Mission of Bandiagara.

The Future of Mali's Past

TÉRÉBA TOGOLA

Mali is heir to a remarkable heritage, composed of an assortment of natural and cultural treasures, both tangible and intangible; it constitutes not only a wealth of knowledge and experience that has been accumulated over the generations, but also an essential aspect of cultural identity for the different communities throughout the country. In spite of its importance, the future of this heritage (its preservation, valorization, and integration into the process of national development) is threatened by numerous factors, including the pillage of archaeological sites and even effects of globalization.

With respect to archaeology, Mali is unquestionably one of the most richly endowed countries in all of West Africa. Studies conducted for a little over a century by both national and foreign researchers have yielded important information about the country's past, unearthing the existence of cultures and civilizations that were previously either unknown or attributed to an external origin or stimulus. To cite just a few examples: early indigenous urbanization of the length of the Middle Niger (well illustrated by the Jenné-Jeno site, founded in 250 B.C.E. near present-day Djenne, which reached the dimensions of a true urban center by C.E. 1000), the culture of sepulchers (characterized by the presence of magnificent underground tombs laid out in the laterite crust, and best known by the vast necropolis at Dogo), the concentration of megaliths in the lake region (whose most important site, Tondidarou, was discovered in the 1930s and consists of over 150 raised stones), and the Tellem culture, with its numerous cliff dwellings along the Bandiagara escarpment containing an abundance of ritual and everyday objects. Besides these cultures, there are thousands of prehistoric sites that have effectively faded.

A national campaign is underway in Mali to save its archaeological sites and treasures.
Photo © Robin Yeager

(Top) Dogon masqueraders perform at a local funeral.
Photo © Shawn Davis

Téréba Togola, Ph.D. in anthropology, defended his doctoral thesis at Rice University in 1992 on Mali's Iron Age sites at Méma. Author and co-author of several articles on archaeology and cultural heritage, Togola directed the development of the Cultural Map of Mali in 2001 and 2002. He has been the National Director of Cultural Heritage since November 2001.
back into the Sahara and Sahelian zone, countless ruins of fortified cities in the south that evidence the period of instability that followed the end of the great empires, and of course the cave paintings of Adrar des Iforas and the engravings of the "Boucle du Baoulé."

Architecture is an important part of Mali's cultural heritage, particularly the Sudanic earthen architecture exemplified by such famous and monumental edifices as the Djingareber and Sankoré mosques in Timbuktu, the mosque at Djenné, and the tomb of Askia Mohammed at Gao. This architecture, born of a fruitful interchange between black Africa and the Arab-Berber world since the age of Mali's great empires, inspired French colonists to create the neo-Sudanic style, which they used for many government buildings. Since independence Malian architects have reused and refined these older styles, and wonderful examples of these historical and new buildings distinguish the streets and squares of Mali's large cities, notably Bamako and Ségou.

One should add to these material relics the myriad intangible elements of Malian heritage: rites of passage or initiations into jow (secret societies) for several ethnic groups (Bambara [Bamana], Senufo, Mianka); dances and masked performances at dama (funerals) for the Dogon; stories, legends, and epics (related by various traditionalists, such as the jeliu, or griots, of the Mande); not to mention the Muslim festivals (Tabaski, Korité, and Mahouloud, the anniversary of the birth of the Prophet Mohammed) practiced throughout the country since the massive conversion to Islam in the last few decades. This fluid intangible culture gives rhythm to the life of diverse communities and expression to their beliefs and worldview.

Despite its importance at several levels (knowledge of the past, reinforcement of the cultural identities of diverse communities, the development of cultural tourism), the cultural heritage of Mali is being eroded by various factors, foremost of which is the pillage of archaeological and ethnographic objects to satisfy the demand for international traffic. This phenomenon, in existence since the collection of "belles pièces" by the first colonial officials in search of the exotic, has progressively developed into a lucrative economic enterprise, involving a whole chain of intermediaries from the villager (hoping for a few dollars) to the international art dealer (who gleans the greatest profit) and the merchant from Bamako, Mopti, or Djenné (who serves as middleman between the two). Originally restricted to the interior Niger Delta and Dogon country (whose archaeological and ethnographic treasures were quickly depleted), it has progressively spread throughout Mali, looting unknown treasures such as the terra cotta figurines of Baninko and the magnificent funerary urns of Sosso. This pillage, and the illicit traffic in art objects that it supports, have contributed for decades to the enrichment of numerous Western galleries and museums. Some pieces, like the famous terra cotta horsemen of the interior Niger Delta, ensconced as they are in these museums, will certainly never be seen by Malian youth unless they travel to Europe or America.

Other factors must be added to this ravaging of Mali's cultural heritage: the country's widespread conversion to Islam and the negative effects of certain development projects. Thus, in Dogon country and in the southern region of the Bambara (which has long resisted Islam), the newly converted are destroying their former ritual objects and sanctuaries, which they no longer consider as part of their heritage. In several regions of the country, historical monuments have been destroyed by development projects and urban pressures. A sadly well-known example occurred in 1993, when a significant section of Sikasso's 19th-century tata (an important defensive rampart, symbolizing resistance to colonization) was demolished to make way for water pipes.

This degradation has driven the country to take several measures to preserve and valorize its cultural heritage. A series of laws have been adopted since the mid-1980s to regulate archaeological digs and prohibit the unauthorized exportation of archaeological objects. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, efforts in heritage preservation were bolstered by UNESCO's classification of Dogon country and the historic cities of Timbuktu (Tombouctou) and Djenné as World Heritage Sites. The establishment in 1993 of management structures, called Cultural Missions, at each of these World Heritage Sites has helped to sensitize local populations to the importance of their cultural heritage. In 1993 Mali and the United States also signed a bilateral accord prohibiting any archaeological objects from the interior Niger Delta or Dogon country from entering the United States without authorization for exportation. The accord is the first of its kind between the United States and a sub-Saharan African country. Finally, and truly remarkable for Africa, the Ministry of Culture has created a Cultural Map of Mali. This document, which will soon become publicly available, is the first step to establishing an inventory of Mali's national cultural heritage. Presented as a cultural atlas, it is intended to raise awareness of the richness and cultural diversity of every region of the country.
Malian Cinema
YOUSSOUF COULIBALY and ABOUBAKAR SIDIKI SANOGO

Over forty years old and with more than two hundred films of all genres in all formats, Malian cinema has occupied a central place in the cinematic landscape of Africa and the world since the 1970s. This impressive international success is to be credited to highly talented and persevering directors such as Souleymane Cissé, Cheick Oumar Sissoko, Adama Drabo, Abdoulaye Ascofaré, and Assane Kouyaté, who have won such prestigious awards as the coveted Yennenga Stallion, the Best First Feature Film as well as Jury prizes at the Pan-African Film and Television Festival of Ouagadougou (FESPACO) in Burkina Faso, and the Jury Prize at the Cannes Film Festival. It is also due to the genius of such gifted actors as Balla Ibrahima, Sory Koita, Hélène Maimouna Diarra, Habib Dembébé, and the late Balla Moussa Keïta.

While cinema was officially born in 1895, Malians were only able to represent themselves and their stories on the screen after their country’s independence from France in 1960; French colonial policy had prevented them from doing so earlier. (Ironically, Mali was of great interest to French anthropologists, who made many of their films there during the colonial period.) Understandably, then, one of the first institutions created in the country after independence was a National Office for Cinematography (OCINAM), now referred to as the National Film Production Center (CNPC).

From its beginning, Malian cinema has been the synthesis of all the other arts in Mali. It has made a profuse use of Malian architecture by setting its locations in the most visually stunning regions of Mali: in Djenne (Guimba), the Dogon country (Taafe Fanga), and the beautiful north (Faraw and Waati). It has also made abundant use of its musical wealth, foregrounding the music of talents such as world music giants Salif Keïta and Ali Farka Touré. Finally, the beautiful costume designs in Souleymane Cissé’s Waati and Cheick Oumar Sissoko’s epics Guimba and La Genèse (Genesis) have contributed as well to a unique cinematic experience of breathtaking beauty.

Malian filmmakers have also used the aesthetics of social realism to interrogate their society and engage in the most profound philosophical questions of our time. They have probed the nature of power in Finté, Guimba, and Yeelen; the connection between power and knowledge in Yeelen and La Genèse; and the links between gender, power, and knowledge in Taafe Fanga. They have problematized the notion of time in cinema, rejuvenating time-sanctioned aesthetic practices of the oral tradition by importing them into the cinema through the central presence of the griot and through editing, acting, and narrative styles.

Recently, Malian cinema has explored several areas that augur an interesting future. The first is animation films, as seen in the work of Mambaye Coulibaly (La geste de Ségou, 1989) and Kadiatou Konaté’s L’enfant terrible (1993), which draw on Malian epics. The second is the increasing popularity of television soap operas and series such as Djibril Kouyaté’s “Wàhala” (2000), Salif Traoré’s “Sida Lakarti” (2001), and Boubacar Sidibé’s “Les aventures de Séko” (2001).

Malian cinema thus chronicles both the regional and global influences on Malian culture as well as the impact of this culture on the globe, through its textiles, music, and photography.

In spite of its immense talent and diversity, Malian cinema faces multiple challenges in production, distribution, and exhibition. There is no film school in Mali to train the next generation of Malian film-makers. Because financial resources are scarce, the vast majority of films have to be made in co-production with other countries, primarily France—through its Ministry of Cooperation—and the European Union. There is also a dire lack of postproduction facilities. Finally, Hollywood, Bollywood, Hong Kong, and some European films fill Malian screens, making it difficult for Malians to see their own images.

Solutions to these problems are being sought at the national, continental, and international levels. Non-governmental institutions such as FEPACI (Pan-African Federation of Filmmakers), UCECAO, and AECI (filmmakers’, producers’, distributors’, and exhibitors’ associations) have taken up the challenge. The advent of digital technology is increasingly considered a means of cutting costs. The growing popular video tradition in neighboring countries is also seen as a potential model. By appointing filmmaker Cheick Oumar Sissoko as Minister of Culture, a first on the continent, the new government of Mali has manifested its commitment to the development of cinema for the joy of Malian audiences and moviegoers around the world.
The Bambara (Bamanan) people announce the birth of a baby girl with the saying “den be guaso la,” “the child is in the kitchen.” In Mali, cuisine is the exclusive domain of women. Only since the colonial era have men entered into this domain, either as house servants (called “boys”) or, later, in restaurants, where, as in Europe or the United States, chefs are usually men.

Starting from simple cooking techniques (boiling and grilling) and sometimes limited by the lack of variety of food supplies, Malian cuisine has historically been dominated by a concern for quantity rather than quality. As a result of greater contact with the cities, which has introduced new products and vegetables of European origin to rural villages, the formerly frugal diet of most of the countryside, based almost exclusively upon the processing of local products, is evolving toward greater refinement and sophistication.

As for the cities themselves, the existence of a food industry, although still nascent, along with the increasing influence of Western imports in both cooking techniques and products, have led to radically new culinary practices and attitudes toward food.

In spite of this development, Malian cuisine retains a strong regional character. Each ethnic group’s foodways are generally linked to the group’s traditions, history, and nearly always to its mode of production. Thus, for nomadic populations such as the Tuareg and Fulani [Peul], whose main activity is herding, foods are based on milk and its by-products; while the Bambara, Dogon, Bwa, Soninke, Senufo, and other farming groups base their cuisine on cereals such as millet, corn, and fonio. Rice serves as a staple in the flood plains of the Niger and Bani rivers, and Boso (Bozo) and Somono fishermen eat mainly fish.

Cooked foods, most often in the form of pastes or couscous, are almost always flavored with sauces, sometimes mixed with milk, and made from a great variety of local products: meat or fish, shea butter, onion, fresh or dried okra, baobab or beans, peanut butter, and many spices such as hot peppers, pepper, and sumbala or its variant, datu. Tubers, including yams and sweet potatoes, are important staples, as are cereals; vegetables such as beans are used occasionally or seasonally in cooking. (Beans nevertheless occupy a special place in Malian society. Because their consumption causes gas, people will not admit to having eaten them in the presence of certain sinanku. Sinanku also will tease one another about having eaten beans and offer them publicly to one another as a joke.)
Certain dishes are linked to particular events or circumstances. For example, jibato naji (the birthing sauce), a very spicy tripe, fish, or poultry soup, is given to women in labor. This soup, eaten very hot, is intended to promote lactation. Festivals, like the Muslim Tabaski celebration, are also occasions for cooking, and women take the utmost care to prepare the family's favorite meals. At these festivals related families also exchange meals and give food to those without.

Despite its apparent simplicity, traditional Malian cuisine offers an extraordinary diversity of recipes. Unfortunately, a significant number of these recipes have disappeared or are in the process of disappearing, replaced by preparations more in line with current tastes and styles.

The cooking of different foods is almost always preceded by a series of preparatory steps, and the range of utensils used indicates the complexity of this process and its desired results. Traditional utensils are simple and basically designed to either crush or grind (such as the grinding stone, used for at least 5,000 years), or to cut, knead, or mix: knives for cutting meat and fresh vegetables (okra, onions, baobab leaves, or beans), axes, toothed knives for fish, wooden or gourd ladles, whisks and spatulas used to stir pastes and sauces.

Traditionally, Malian cooking takes place on a hearth made of three stone blocks, or on a terra cotta stove placed either in the kitchen or outside, within the family courtyard. The main fuel is dry wood. In the northern Sahelian and Saharan zones, dried manure often takes the place of wood.

The use of charcoal has spread in cities in the past thirty years, as have metal stoves. The considerable increase in the amount of wood needed by a growing population has led to deforestation beyond the regenerative capacities of Mali's forests. In an effort to curtail this development, several organizations have created and distributed stoves that are more economical in their use of wood and charcoal. Furthermore, the government has made significant efforts to popularize the use of gas. Electricity is also used as a source of energy.

Significant changes are also occurring in cookware. Earthenware pottery has today been largely replaced by metal cooking pots made of strong heat conductors such as cast iron, aluminum, and stainless steel. Strong Pyrex baking plates and Teflon saucepans and frying pans have appeared in the kitchens of the wealthiest women. Their use is improving the quality of cooking, and gradually easing the cook's work.

Recipes adapted from Malian Cuisine: The Art of Living.
Meals are eaten together—men in one group, women in another, in a respectful silence, particularly among children. Food is eaten with the fingers, except for liquids, which are consumed with wooden or gourd ladles. Today, wooden, gourd, and ceramic receptacles are increasingly being replaced by enameled metal, aluminum, and plastic dishes.

This practice of communal eating with the hands from one plate constitutes the essence of the dining ritual in Mali. In well-to-do and/or “Westernized” settings, the use of plates, spoons, and forks is having a considerable effect on this ritual. Each person eats from his own plate, no longer with his hand but with his own fork or spoon; and no longer on the ground, but at a table. People no longer drink from a common vessel but from individual glasses.

This individualization of the dining experience, copied from European behavior, is accompanied in wealthier areas by diversification of the diet; the meal no longer consists of a single dish, but of a variety of dishes.

Cuisine, then, like other aspects of Malian culture, is in a state of rapid flux. Rooted in historical knowledge, it is open to other culinary traditions, adopting new products, techniques, and eating habits.

† Sinankuya is most often described as a joking relationship. People who have a certain connection with one another, based on kinship, a historical episode, gender, or age have the right to be more familiar with one another—and the social familiarity sometimes involves humor.

In many rural households women cook outside in the courtyard and use wood as their primary fuel.

Photo © Shawn Davis
FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

HISTORY

ASHIMA (Association des Historiens Maliens) <http://www.inl.refer.org/ashima/index.htm>

MUSIC

African Music Archive Institute of Ethnology and African Studies, Mainz University, Germany <http://ntama.uni-mainz.de/~ama/archive/ama_links.html>.

Chary, Eric. "Eric Chiry’s home page (Mande music and links to online ethnomusicology resources).” <http://cherry.web.wesleyan.edu/>.

Recordings

by NANCY GROCE

Nancy Groce, curator of Scotland at the Smithsonian, is a folklorist, historian, and ethnomusicologist. She holds a Ph.D. in American Studies from the University of Michigan and has authored numerous books and articles on music, folklore, and culture.

Ever Summer for the past 37 years, the Smithsonian Folklife Festival has highlighted the culture of different states, nations, or other communities, with each program offering new challenges and opportunities to fulfill the Smithsonian’s mission of increasing and diffusing knowledge. Sometimes the cultures that are the most challenging to present are not the most distant and least familiar—rather, they are the very ones that we think we know. Scotland is one of these.

Americans tend to have a very positive impression of Scotland. Many Americans—including a majority of our presidents and “Founding Fathers”—have claimed some Scottish or Scots-Irish ancestry. Most of the foundation stones of our political system—including our Constitution—owe a significant debt to the Scottish Enlightenment. And since the 17th century, Scottish engineers, inventors, educators, scientists, naturalists, artists, and craftspeople have helped shape and guide America’s industry, education, and cultural and social life. In recent years, huge numbers of Americans have flocked to films such as Braveheart and Rob Roy and gone away duly impressed with Scotland’s stunning Highland glens, mist-enshrouded islands, stately castles, and passionate patriotism. And the kilts, bagpipes, shortbread, and heather—it’s not that they don’t exist, it’s just that the real Scotland is even more varied and interesting than the stereotypes.

Contemporary Scotland is a sophisticated, modern nation; its 5.1 million people are among the best educated and most widely traveled in the world. The majority of Scots live in urban areas along the Central Belt, a swath of land that runs from the ancient capital city of Edinburgh on Scotland’s east coast to post-industrial Glasgow on the west coast. The Central Belt is only 40 miles wide, but the cultural gulf between Glasgow and Edinburgh and their respective coasts is as noticeable as any between New York and Los Angeles. In fact, the regional diversity of Scotland—a country slightly larger than Connecticut, but smaller than Hawai‘i—is difficult for Americans to fathom. It’s almost as if Americans think in terms of miles while Scots think in terms of centuries and, sometimes, millennia. Scots are deeply proud of their home region: be it the beautiful hills of the Borders Region, the broad, fertile farmland of Aberdeenshire, industrial mill towns like Dundee or Galashiels, the spectacular Highland glens of Wester Ross, the stark but stunning Shetland Islands, or the medieval cityscape of Edinburgh’s Royal Mile. Each of Scotland’s many regions has its own distinct look and unique history, dialect, folklore, and cultural traditions. We celebrate this diversity at this Festival.

There is room in this program book to touch upon only a few aspects of Scottish culture. Historian Edward Cowan gives a brief but enlightening tour through the complexities of Scottish history; folklorist
Margaret Bennett provides an introduction to Scottish traditional music, Stephanie Smith to dance, and Louise Butler an orientation to traditional crafts in contemporary Scotland. Three languages (English, Scots, and Gaelic) have historically, if uneasily, co-existed in Scotland. Today, these have been joined by multiple other tongues—including Hindi and Chinese. We are delighted to have Hugh Cheape’s essay to introduce us to Gaelic, and Billy Kay’s to introduce us to Scots. Theater critic Joyce Macmillan writes on what is probably the least known and most urban of the Scottish traditions featured at the 2003 Smithsonian Folklife Festival—Christmas pantomime. If you’ve never heard about “panto,” ask anyone from Scotland to tell you about this wildly popular form of folk theater.

Because of pragmatic constraints of funding and research time, this year’s program focuses tightly on the culture of Scotland itself and does not attempt to address the important topic of the Scottish diaspora.
Immigrant groups from Scotland (like those of other lands), whose families left their native shores generations ago, brought with them the culture that existed at the time of their departure. Over the years, they Aberdeen Harbor is the gateway to the North Sea oil industry. Photo by Paul Tomkins © VisitScotland/ScottishViewpoint

(Facing page) Urban Scotland—Princes Street in the heart of Edinburgh. Photo by Paul Tomkins © VisitScotland/ScottishViewpoint

Crofters’ cottage near Glencoe in the Scottish Highlands. Photo © VisitScotland/ScottishViewpoint

and their descendants nurtured that cultural inheritance and strove to keep their family and community traditions as true and accurate to their memory as possible. At the same time, they became full participants in and valued contributors to America’s evolving history and culture.

Inevitably, some changes—and perhaps a touch of romanticism—crept in, as happens with most groups. Scottish Americans made great efforts to retain and honor their heritage in the New World, but their story is not identical to that of the Scots who remained in Scotland. Many Scottish-American families migrated voluntarily or involuntarily—before the impact of the Industrial Revolution transformed much of Scotland from a rural to an urban society; before the political and social upheavals of the 20th century; before immigration from Europe, Asia, and Africa enriched Scottish cities; before the off-shore oil industry, “Silicon Glen,” and scientific breakthroughs like “Dolly the Sheep” had a major impact on the Scottish economy; and long before 1999, when the Devolution movement in the United Kingdom returned a parliament to Scotland for the first time in three centuries.

Scotland is still “Bonnie Scotland,” but the traditions that make Scotland Scottish and that we celebrate at this Festival continually grow and change, as traditions will do in any healthy, vibrant culture. This is a fascinating time in Scottish history, and aspects of this Festival reflect the ongoing debate about Scottish image and culture. Almost every Scot we consulted voiced concern that the outside world frequently equated...
Scotland with the Broadway musical Brigadoon (which, they were quick to point out, was filmed in the 1950s on a Hollywood sound stage because the producers couldn’t find anywhere in Scotland that was “Scottish enough”!). Today, there is lively debate and no consensus about what comes next.

The Scottish Executive, the government of Scotland since Devolution, has an advertising campaign that uses the slogan “One Scotland: Kilts, Bagpipes, Many Cultures.” To my mind, that nicely sums up both historical and contemporary Scotland. Successive waves of peoples—Picts, Angles, Saxons, Celts, Vikings, Irish, Jews, Pakistanis, and others—have settled in Scotland, and the Scots have shown a unique ability to combine their differences into a unified but not homogenized culture. Scotland’s impact on world culture has been out of all proportion to its size and wealth. Little wonder, then, that Scotland continues to serve as an inspiration for the United States in so many areas of culture, technology, art, and education.

The 2003 Festival offers visitors a unique opportunity to listen to some of the many voices of contemporary Scotland. Being Scots, there is little danger that they will agree with one another, but all the participants invited—outstanding artists in music, song, narrative, and craft—play an integral part in sustaining and shaping the culture of contemporary Scotland. We are honored to have them as our guests.
Scottish History: The Culture and the Folk

EDWARD J. COWAN

The restoration of the Scottish Parliament in 1999 after an absence of almost three hundred years represented one of the biggest constitutional upheavals in British history. Yet, remarkably, it was accomplished purely by means of the ballot box, without resort to bullets or bloodshed. The stateless nation acquired a devolved assembly with powers somewhat analogous to those of an American state legislature. Scotland had contrived, against the odds, to keep alive a sense of nationhood after the Union of the Crowns in 1603, when James of Scotland succeeded Elizabeth I, and after 1707, when the Scots surrendered their parliament in return for free trade to create the United Kingdom of Great Britain. Separated from England by a border of mountains and rivers, Scotland has always been a small country, poor in resources and population but rich in history and self-mythologization, which, through time, has forged a strong sense of national identity. That formulation of Scottishness has always been staunchly populist and anti-authoritarian, placing a high value upon freedom and the dignity of the individual, as well as nurturing a communitarian spirit that takes care of its own while defying external interference. Or so we like to think.

The Romans came and saw, but declined to conquer. Although they penetrated far to the north, they cut their losses by erecting an elaborate rampart, Hadrian’s Wall, across the north of England, effectively dividing the island of Britannia. When the invaders withdrew in the 4th and 5th centuries, the northern half, which was to become Scotland, was occupied by a multicultural population. The southwest was held by the Britons, Welsh-speakers whose kinsfolk extended all the way to the English Channel. A group of newcomers, the Angles, were pushing westwards up the valleys of the Eastern Borders. Originally hired by Rome as mercenaries, they abandoned their coastal settlements as global warming elevated sea levels. Eastern Scotland, including the northern islands of Orkney and Shetland, was inhabited by the Picts, a people with a rich stone-carving tradition that has bequeathed to posterity portraits of Picts at war and peace, iconographic fragments splicing together pagan and Christian beliefs, and, in the form of bewildering abstract symbols, eloquent messages that so far no one has been able to interpret. To the west and out to the isles were the Scots, whose sway extended over northern Ireland.

The first millennium of Scottish history was, in effect, a crucible in which each of those peoples strove with the others for ultimate domination. When the Vikings arrived from Norway to scourge the clans and tribes for over a century, a common identity was somehow forged, and from the chaos the Scots emerged triumphant, in charge (if not in control) of a largely Celtic nation. During the 12th and 13th centuries, under the aegis of a powerful dynasty, the kingdom continued to develop; unlike England, it was spared a Norman Conquest, but it nevertheless was able to import the more desirable elements of contemporary European culture. New institutions of government and law accompanied the growth of commerce and the creation of towns, or burghs as Edward J. Cowan is Professor of Scottish History at the University of Glasgow. He previously taught at the University of Edinburgh and was Chair of Scottish Studies at the University of Guelph, Ontario, from 1979 to 1993. He has published widely on various aspects of Scottish history and culture.

Stirling Castle in central Scotland has stood as a gateway between Scottish Highland and Lowland cultures for centuries. Photo © VisitScotland/ScottishViewpoint we call them. Kings fostered strong links with a vibrant and revitalized church, which gradually displaced that of the old Celtic saints such as Ninian, Kentigern, and Columba; however attractive as personalities, they were little more than the venerated objects of local cults. The new fad was for St Andrew, authenticated by Scripture as his rivals were not and adopted as Scotland’s patron saint. As surely as it rejected the Celtic saints, Scotland turned its back on its Gaelic-speaking inhabitants; in C.E.1000 they were to be found on the banks of the Tweed, but during the next millennium they would gradually but surely be pushed out to the west coast and the Hebrides. This Highland/Lowland dichotomy constitutes one of the great themes of Scottish history.

Calamity struck in the late 13th century when Scots were forced to resist English imperialistic aggression. William Wallace (ca. 1270–1305) led the resistance against English occupation. Demonized as a commoner and regarded by friend and foe alike as a “man from nowhere,” he turned the aristocratic world of Scotland upside down. He offended the nobility and scandalized the enemy, whom he devastatingly defeated at Stirling Bridge in 1297. Eventually betrayed to the English and executed, he died a martyr to the freedom of his nation, but he was a warning to future kings that if they failed in their duty, the Scottish common man would intervene.

The cause of nationhood was continued by Robert Bruce, whose heroic efforts resulted in victory at Bannockburn (1314). He orchestrated the finest and most inspirational statement to emerge from the wars, the Declaration of Arbroath (1320), which in 1998 the United States Senate declared to have been a model for the American Declaration of Independence. The Arbroath document was a letter written by the Scottish nobility, barons, and commoners urging the pope to recognize the legality of Robert’s kingship. So intent were the Scots upon independence, the Declaration states, that if Bruce should ever transgress as king, the signers would remove him and set up another, better able to govern, in his place. They were thus the first in Europe to enunciate not only the contractual, or elective, theory of monarchy that lies at the root of all modern constitutionalism, but also the principle of the sovereignty of the people. They went on to vow that so long as a hundred remained alive, they would never yield. “It is not for glory, nor riches, nor honors that we are fighting but for freedom alone, which no honest person will lose but with life itself.” Such were the legacies of the Wars of Independence, ideas that were to pervade the learned and folk literatures of Scotland.

Similar assumptions informed the popular revolt that led to Protestant Reformation in Scotland in 1560. To overthrow the medieval Church, John Knox fostered sentiments that later generations would characterize as democratic and egalitarian. There were undoubtedly benefits for the population at large in the form of school and university education, literacy, numeracy, moral welfare, and the provision of relief for the poor. But the claw of Presbyterianism was to seize the throat of the Scottish people in its grasp for almost three hundred years.
Much of contemporary Scottish tradition grew from the everyday lives of its people as seen in this detail of the early 19th-century painting, Harvest at Auchendinny, artist unknown. Photo © National Museums of Scotland

Long before the Reformation, the Kirk (Church) had attacked popular culture, but after 1560, anything that savored of superstition was deemed to harbor latent sympathy for Rome; hence, all folk and popular beliefs were anathema and had to be destroyed. Scotland's notorious witch-hunts, in which hundreds, mainly women, were executed, can be seen as a metaphor for the assault on folk culture in general. Trial testimony contains much detail about music, song, dance, drinking, sex, and vengeance on neighbors. Beliefs about childbirth, courtship, marriage, death, folk healing, fairies, and ghosts were condemned, as well as witches, conjurors, bards, and balladeers. The most intensely religious period in Scottish history was thus ironically also the most superstitious, as a kind of mania seized the populace irrespective of social class or position. Indeed, in this period Scotland witnessed the European phenomenon of the cultivation of manners, as the wealthy and the upwardly mobile gradually distinguished themselves from the rabble through designed culture, education, literacy, language, and conspicuous consumption, ranging from housing and clothing to food, drink, and the provision of sports equipment.

What saved folk culture was, again ironically, the Kirk, with help from the Enlightenment. In order to fend off what many ministers believed to be the hellish legions of atheism and to support the existence of God, some of them wrote tracts purporting to demonstrate the reality of fairies, spirits, demons, etcetera—the very entities that had only recently led many a poor woman to the stake. Folk beliefs became matters of study and investigation rather than foibles to be rooted out. The Devil was a long time a-dying in Scotland, but from the early 18th century, ballads and songs with which he had once been associated were actually sought out by collectors and published. Enlightenment historians became fascinated by the phenomenon of manners. In writing conjectural history—that for which no evidence had survived—they turned to current anthropological theory, such as that used to interpret the Native peoples of America, who were thought to display characteristics typical of earlier generations of humanity. Thus it was that in some minds Gaels and Indians became identified.
Prominent in recovering the folk culture of his people was Robert Burns (1759–96), whose life and works were to become uniquely traditionalized. Another collector was the novelist Walter Scott (1771–1832). In his finer novels, he celebrated the role played by the subordinate classes in historical processes, though in his heart of hearts he believed that rabid Presbyterians and barbarous clansmen alike must inevitably be consigned to the trashcan of history. Scott, like many people, was trapped between regret for the loss of some aspects of the past and despair about some trends in his own lifetime that were supposedly equated with progress—one of the reasons, presumably, why he attracted so many readers in the American South. At a moment of anguish, this supreme patriot cried, “Little by little, whatever your wishes may be, you will destroy and undermine until nothing of what makes Scotland Scotland, shall remain.” In 1822, his own attempts at halting the march of time included inventing the notion that all Scots of the same surname should wear kilts of a uniform tartan on the occasion when George IV became the first reigning monarch to visit Scotland in 181 years. Some Scots liked the idea, but others still believe that kilts symbolize bogus anachronism. Scott thus invented new traditions while ultimately rejecting those of the folk who, during the horrors of industrialization in places such as Glasgow and the west of Scotland, went on singing about a Brigadoon-like Neverland. It was perhaps no accident that the inventor of Peter Pan was a Scot, J. M. Barrie (1860–1937). By the late 19th century, when hundreds of Scots were in the forefront of scientific, medical, and engineering breakthroughs, infliction the telephone, television, and, among Scottish emigrants, telaesthesia (perception from afar) on the world, thousands of their fellow countrymen convinced themselves that they were living in a tartan phantasmagoria.

Scots who betook themselves to the farthest edges of the British Empire consoled themselves with Burns Suppers and St Andrew’s Day dinners, playing bagpipes and bellowing “Auld Lang Syne.” When the imperial adventure ended, they scrutinized their native land and found it wanting, culturally, commercially, and constitutionally. Disillusionment with a political system that seemed to favor London and southern England operated to the advantage of the Scottish National Party, though the Labour and Liberal parties similarly benefited. Meanwhile a cultural renaissance was underway, reflected in historiography, literature, music, art, drama, the folk revival, and the arts in general, all of which debated Scottish identity and the role of Scots in the modern world. In that heady dialectic a new Scottish confidence was discovered, of which the restoration of the Scottish Parliament was a result and not a cause.

In the modern world of multinationals and the so-called global economy, political independence is a phantom, but Scots believe they can make a difference. They are the Folk, after all, who so long ago declared their devotion to freedom alone, which no honest person would ever surrender save with life itself. The small nations still have something to teach the large ones. Or so we like to think.
The traditional songs, poetry, and music of Scotland are as easy to recognize as they are difficult to define. Just as purple heather cannot describe the whole country, so with traditional arts: no simple description will fit. The fruits of diverse languages and aesthetic values, these traditions are rooted in strikingly different landscapes. Within this small country there are enormous contrasts. Culturally as well as geographically, Scotland could be divided into several (imaginary) areas [see map on page 70], each reflecting a distinct spirit of the Scottish people, their songs, poetry, and music.

Along with the Western Isles (the Outer Hebrides), the Highlands—Scotland's largest land mass and most sparsely populated area—is traditionally home to the Gaels, who make their living from “crofting” (working very small farms), fishing, weaving, whisky distilling, tourism, and, nowadays, computing. “Ciamar a tha thu’ n duigh?” a neighbor enquires, in Scottish Gaelic, “How are you today?” The songs and music have evolved through history, from as early as the first century C.E., when Scotland and Ireland shared traditions about their heroes. These traditions remember the hero Cù Culainn, whose warriors were trained to fight by a formidable woman on the Isle of Skye. To this day, you can hear Gaelic songs of galleys plying the seas between Ireland and the Hebrides, harking back to the 3rd- and 4th-century wondrous adventures of Fionn MacCumhail, his poet son Ossian, grandson Oscar, and several centuries of seafarers who landed on those shores.

From the 12th to the mid-18th century, Gaelic songs and music reflected a society bound up in a hierarchical clan system. The word “clan” is from clann, Gaelic for “children,” and just as a father is responsible for the well-being within his family, so was the chief regarded within the clan. Mutual loyalty and protection were fundamental social values, and so were the hereditary rights to cultivate land and to fish.

The arts were highly valued in this society, and clan chiefs were the first patrons and sponsors of artists in Scotland. The retinue of the chief’s household included the bard, piper, and harper, not to mention the armorer, a traditional craftsman highly skilled in metalwork and Celtic design, who created weaponry, tableware, and jewelry. The greatest artists of that era continue to influence Gaelic singers, poets, and musicians of today—pipers, for example, still play the compositions of the MacCrimmons (hereditary musicians to the MacLeods of Skye), while singers retain songs of the ancient bards.

When the clan system broke down after the Battle of Culloden (1746), there were enormous changes not only in Highland society but also in the traditional arts. The harp (clarsach), for example, virtually disappeared, though many harp tunes survived via the bagpipes. In 1931...
Three gypsies came tae oor hall door,
And O but they sang bonnie-O,
They sang sae sweet and sae complete
That they stole the hairt of a Lady-O.

—an excerpt of a ballad from the North-East, as sung by Jeannie Robertson

Renowned Scottish fiddler Neil Gow (1727–1807), painted by Sir Henry Raeburn. Photo courtesy Scottish National Portrait Gallery

the founding of the Clarsach Society restored the use of the instrument, which, since the 1970s, has enjoyed a phenomenal revival.

In the very northern tip of Scotland, in the Orkneys and Shetland Islands, speech is akin to Nordic languages. People will tell you how the king of Norway gave the Shetland Islands to Scotland as part of his daughter’s dowry and explain they have belonged to Scotland only for a little over four centuries. The livelihood here is based on crofting, fishing, knitting, whisky (in the Orkneys), and more recently, oil. There is also tourism, and when a friendly Shetlander asks you “Fu ist du?” you can reply, “I’m fine, thank you.”

Ancient ballads rooted in Scandinavia are part of song repertoires, though it is quite common for the same singers to launch into Victorian broadside-ballads and American Country and Western songs as well. Seafaring people bring back treasures from around the world, including songs and musical instruments. The fiddle is the main instrument in the Shetlands, and Shetlanders have been strong guardians of their fiddle traditions.

The boat from Shetland will take you to Aberdeen, where the surrounding countryside of the North-East farmlands contrasts with the neighboring Highlands. While the language is Doric—“Fit like the day?” is one greeting—place-names reflect an earlier era when Gaelic was spoken. The area is also one of the strongholds of ancient Scots ballads, known as the “muckle (great) sungs,” some of which have Norse connections. The North-East boasts such singers as the late Jeannie Robertson, whose fabulous voice and phenomenal repertoire earned her worldwide reputation. Jeannie’s people are Travellers, known for centuries all over Scotland as “tinkers” because of their skill as itinerant tinsmiths. Nowadays, the Travelling people are celebrated as custodians of Scotland’s oral tradition.

Barley (for whisky) is the main crop on North-East farms, which, in the day of the horse, employed hundreds of laborers. The harsh lifestyle of bygone days is best remembered in song—with wit and humor they tell of this farmer or that ploy or escapade, or recall, with sentimental tears, some four-legged friend that brightened the daily toil, sing of a plowman’s sweetheart, or praise a piece of farm machinery. Evenings in stone-built bunkhouses, known as “bothies,” were spent in singing these “bothy songs” as well as ancient ballads, and in entertaining one another with tunes on the button melodeon (a relative of the accordion), mouth organ (harmonica), jew’s harp, or fiddle, with the occasional dance in tackety (hobnail) boots. This way of life changed with increased mechanization on farms after World War II, and those who actually experienced it are now well up in years. The songs and music live on, however, especially at annual gatherings and folk festivals held all over Scotland.

The year 2002 saw the completion of a remarkable eight-volume collection of songs of the North-East, The Greig-Duncan Folk Song Collection. This was originally the work of a minister and a schoolmaster, and was first published in weekly newspapers between 1907 and 1911. Collecting in the same area in 1951, Alan Lomax observed, “What most impressed me was the vigor of the Scots folksong tradition, on the one hand, and its close connection with literary sources on the other. . . . The Scots have the liveliest folk tradition of the British Isles, but paradoxically, it is the most bookish.” No matter what the region, the Scots love their song books, and no area was better served in the 19th century than the Scottish Borders, home to Sir Walter Scott. When you travel south to the Borders and on to the counties of Dumfries and Galloway, you will see enormous tracts of land planted in conifers by the Forestry Commission in the 20th century. Nevertheless, these rolling hills are still home to Cheviot sheep raised on vast hillfarms, with isolated shepherd cottages bearing witness to the lives of the hardy, self-sufficient folk. In times past, the only entertainment the herders could look forward to was a Saturday night get-together with other herders, some of whom would walk miles to share a song or a tune.

Whether they live in the country or in any of the mill towns such as Hawick, Galashiels, and Melrose, home to weavers and wool workers, Border folk speak and sing in Broad Scots. The jewel of the Border song tradition is the impressive corpus of Border Ballads, most of which are rooted in a troubled history of disputes over land and family inheritances. The late folklorist Hamish Henderson once remarked that “Scotland. . . . throughout its history has given much greater credence to its ballads than to its laws.” These ballads undoubtedly have kept alive not only ancient history, but also, at times, ancient grudges.

The town of Dumfries was once home to Robert Burns, who lived there from 1792 until his untimely death in 1796. There he composed some of his finest songs, such as “Ae Fond Kiss,” “Flow Gently Sweet Afton,” and his political squib, “Ye Jacobites By Name.” The plowman poet and song-maker born in a cottage in Ayrshire is now celebrated around the world, and his poems and songs are translated into many languages. In the closing years of his life, Burns also collected songs from all over Scotland and helped edit two major collections of traditional and revised song texts set to traditional tunes.

---

A MAN’S A MAN FOR A’ THAT

Is there for honest poverty
That hings his head, an a’ that?
The coward slave, we pass him by
We dare be poor for a’ that!
For a’ that, and a’ that,
Our toils obscure and a’ that
The rank is but the guinea’s stamp,
The man’s the gowd for a’ that.

—Robert Burns
(sung at the opening of the Scottish Parliament in 1999)
Returning north again to the Central Belt you will sense a myriad of cultural differences, especially in the cities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Perth, and Dundee. Landscapes, skyscapes, and traditional industries are reflected in local songs and music. Glasgow, world famous for building ships such as the Queen Elizabeth II, also had an earlier tobacco trade with Virginia. Self-styled “tobacco lords” built huge mansions, in stark contrast to the overcrowded tenements of the masses. If surviving depends on a sense of humor, then Glasgow will flourish—the rapid-fire retort that gives comedian Billy Connelly his fame (or notoriety) is part of the Glasgow character, and the matchless wit of song-maker Adam McNaughtan sums up the Glaswegian. It’s also true there that, regardless of your name, you might be asked, “How’s it gaun, Jimmy?” Dundee, with its jute and jam and newspapers, has a more droll humor, as does Edinburgh. Though Scotland’s capital is only 40 miles from Glasgow, there is a world of difference between the two cities.

Every August since 1946, the Edinburgh International Festival has been the world stage to every imaginable art form, from the most sophisticated classical ballet, opera, or orchestra to the seediest side-street show. In 1951, to offset its elitist bias, Hamish Henderson helped set up The People’s Festival Ceilidhs. The aim was to give a platform to traditional Scots singers such as Jeannie Robertson and Jimmy MacBeath, Gaelic singers Flora MacNeill and Kitty MacLeod, and piper Calum Johnston. So successful were these ceilidhs that they are often credited as sparking what became known as the Folksong Revival, and Henderson is acknowledged as the father of the movement.

From the early 1960s, folk clubs were springing up all over Scotland, with rural festivals giving people a chance to enjoy weekends of music and song. Then, in the 1980s, a Hebridean priest, Father Colin MacInnes, piloted a féis on the Isle of Barra—a teaching festival where youngsters could learn traditional Gaelic songs, bagpipes, clarsach (harp), fiddle, and other instruments. It was a resounding success and triggered a movement that now extends all over Scotland, with hundreds of children becoming proficient in a range of instruments and songs.

Every January since 1993, Glasgow’s Celtic Connections Festival has staged world-class folk music concerts that attract people from all over the world. Though the rural areas may have been incubators of folk songs and music for centuries, Glasgow has suddenly become center stage for a huge revival of traditional songs and music, along with newer sounds that borrow from other cultures.

Twenty-first-century Scotland enjoys the healthiest and liveliest “folk scene” imaginable. High schools offering academic concentrations in traditional music have been established in the Wester Ross town of Plockton, and in Edinburgh. The Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in Glasgow also offers a college degree in Scottish traditional music. If the enthusiasm and performance standards among young generations of traditional singers and instrumentalists are anything to go by, then Scottish music and song are in safe hands.
Scottish Dance

STEPHANIE SMITH

Traditional Scottish dance is as varied as its music, and includes both social and performance forms. People dance at weddings and at public dance events, many of which are held in village halls. The origin of most dances in Scotland can be traced to the mid-18th century, but many are older. Traditional social dances have remained popular in rural Scotland, and recently in towns and cities, interest in them has revived in the form of ceilidh (pronounced “kay-lee”) dancing. Ceilidh is the Scottish Gaelic word for “party.” Traditionally, a ceilidh might include music, dance, story, and talk as part of the festivities; today, “ceilidh” has come to mean a public or private dance event. The most popular ceilidh dances include “Strip the Willow,” “The Dashing White Sergeant,” “The Eightsome Reel,” “The Canadian Barn Dance,” “The Highland Schottische,” “The Gay Gordons,” “St. Bernard’s Waltz,” “Broom’s Reel,” and “The Britannia Two-Step.” At rural village dances, you may find people doing old-time waltzes, the Lancers and Quadrilles (in square formation), as well as popular longways dances. Most urban ceilidhs feature a caller, whose instruction helps those unfamiliar with the dances to have a good time. The role of the present-day caller is analogous to the one played by the peripatetic dancing masters of the 18th to 20th centuries, who went to villages and towns to give dance classes.

The oldest Scottish social dances, those born of village life, are the Threesome or Foursome Reels mentioned in early Scottish literature and first described in the 1700s in forms similar to those enjoyed today. In a basic reel, three or four people in a line do setting steps (dancing in place) and then a figure-eight pattern. There are regional reel variations, notably in Orkney, Shetland, and the Hebrides. During the 16th to 18th centuries, the Scottish social dance repertoire grew incrementally by incorporating couple dances, longways set dances, and square formations from continental Europe and England. These forms were adapted to Scottish tastes with Scottish tunes and steps. Dance Assemblies began in the early 18th century in civic buildings in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and eastern Scottish towns, attended mostly by the landed gentry and a new and wealthy merchant class. The traveling dancing masters brought the latest dances to people even in remote country districts.

In 1923, in response to a decline in country dancing, Jean Milligan and Ysobel Stewart, supported by publisher Michael Diack, founded the Scottish Country Dance Society in Glasgow; it later became the Royal Scottish Country Dance Society (RSCDS). It established standardized and stylized steps, figures, and dances. The RSCDS provides education and training for teachers and dancers and has group affiliates worldwide where you can learn the figures and do the dances (see list of Web sites on page 93).

Most Americans have seen Highland dancing, especially the “Highland Fling” and “Sword Dance,” which are solo and competition dances. Another Highland dance is the “Seann Triubhas,” or “Old Trousers,” which supposedly refers to the Highlanders’ disdain of the trews they had to wear instead of kilts when these were outlawed by the 1746 Act of Proscription. Highland dance competitions evolved as part of early 19th-century bagpiping competitions, and later of Highland Games. By the end of the century, women dared to compete; children’s competitions were added in the early 20th century. Today, two organizations oversee the teaching of Highland dance and competitions.

Research in traditional Scottish dance forms—including that done by Tom and Joan Flett in the 1940s and 1950s and more recently by the Scottish Traditions of Dance Trust—has documented dances that are sometimes only remembered by people in their communities of origin, but are actively performed by revivalists and reconstructors outside. Among these are the ritual “Sword Dance of Papa Stour” from Shetland, Hebridean dances such as “The Dirk Dance” and “The Reel of the Black Cocks,” Scottish hard-shoe dances such as “The Flowers of Edinburgh” and “The 21st of August,” and hard-shoe solo step dancing. The last had been thought to survive only in areas of Canada where Scots settled like Cape Breton and Newfoundland, but it is still remembered by a few individuals in Scotland.

The bagpipe and the fiddle have been the principal instruments used to accompany dance. In some remote parts of Scotland influenced by Calvinism, fiddle and pipe music was discouraged, leading to the development of a musical genre of sung nonsense syllables known in Gaelic as “puirt a beul” or “mouth music” and in Lowland Scotland as “diddling” or “deedling.” The building of village and community halls from the late 19th century onward affected the music used for dance as fiddles and pipes—effective for small dance spaces such as kitchens—were reinforced by the accordion to fill larger spaces with sound. The late master accordion player Sir Jimmy Shand (1908-2000), one of those who set the standard for Scottish dance music in the 20th century, made his first recording in 1933. Dance bands today may feature accordions, banjos, fiddles, pipes, drums, bass, electric keyboards, and saxophones.

The tunes for many dances derive from a military “light music” repertoire of 2/4 and 4/4 marches, reels, and jigs. The strathspey, the only form of dance tune unique to Scotland, emerged in fiddle repertoires in the 18th century as an exciting new way to play reels in the Highlands and North East region of Scotland (near the River Spey). The strathspey’s special energy derives from a distinctive combination of dotted eighth and sixteenth notes—called a “Scottish snap” when the shorter note precedes the longer one. The formations for country dance reels and strathspeys are identical.

Dance is enjoying a renaissance in contemporary Scotland. In addition to the “ceilidh boom” of the late 20th century, other forms of traditional social and performance dance, new hybrids such as Scottish hip-hop, and ethnic dance from other countries are being taught and performed in the major cities. The establishment of The Scottish Traditions for Dance Trust and dance centers such as Dancebase in Edinburgh bodes well for the vitality of dance in Scottish culture.
Panto in Scotland

JOYCE MCMILLAN

Pantomime, a peculiarly British traditional Christmas show for the whole family, is part vaudeville, part fairy tale, part homage to the Italian commedia dell’arte tradition of stylized romantic comedy and clowning. Added to the mix are an element of brash modern showbiz entertainment, a tradition of ritualized-but-riotous audience participation, and a dash of the old midwinter pagan “feast of misrule” when everything was turned topsy-turvy for a day—men became women, paupers became kings. As you can imagine, this wonderful rag-bag of holiday fun can be noisy and glitzy, rude and romantic, subversive and spectacular.

The panto tradition in Scotland is particularly interesting precisely because this kind of show belongs so firmly in its origins to the 19th-century English music hall. Some of the great panto story lines come from classic European fairy tales; the best-known are Cinderella, Aladdin, and Jack and the Beanstalk, all with the grand rags-to-riches theme. But they are usually told with a strong English inflection of maypoles and village greens; and some of the stories—notably the famous tale of Dick Whittington, the poor boy who became Lord Mayor of London—are famously difficult to transpose to Scotland.

Yet over the years since the 1950s—perhaps because of the growth of a strong professional theater system in Scotland combined with the relative smallness of the Scottish stage community, which allows a strong two-way traffic between “straight” theater and the variety tradition—the Scottish panto scene has become perhaps the liveliest in Britain. Great postwar variety stars including Stanley Baxter, Rikki Fulton, Johnny Beattie, and the late Jimmy Logan took up the business of playing the “Dame,” the classic man-dressed-as-a-woman role at the heart of panto; and now they have passed the tradition on to a younger generation of performers.

At the same time, living Scottish writers are involved in creating new versions of the old panto scripts; and the panto tradition has produced a fascinating spin-off in the shape of a new wave of Christmas plays written specifically for children—many of them by the Scottish playwright Stuart Paterson—which make powerful use of the same tradition of magical story lines and essential audience participation.

Every Christmas, more than twenty professional pantomimes are staged in towns and cities across Scotland, along with dozens of amateur performances in smaller communities; the largest pantos, in Glasgow and Edinburgh, run for a seven-week season from the beginning of December to late January, each playing to a total audience of between 75,000 and 100,000 people. The marriage between Scottish audiences and this unruly art form must be one of the strangest in the history of theater. But it certainly works, creating a vital creative link between the mainstream Scottish stage and the world of popular entertainment, as well as generating huge profits at the box office and a great glow of theatrical fun and warmth in the heart of winter.

“Buttons” leads the cast in song during the 2002 production of Cinderella at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in Glasgow. Photo courtesy Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama

Joyce McMillan, theater critic of The Scotsman, also writes a political/social commentary column for the paper, and broadcasts regularly on the radio. In 1998–99 she was a member of the British government’s Steering Group on procedures for the new Scottish Parliament.
Scottish Gaelic

Hugh Cheape

A Chlianna Guinn Cead-chathaich
Anois uair bhar n-aithanta

Children of Conn of the Hundred Battles,
Now is the time for you to win recognition!
—Battle Incitement by Lachlan MacMhuirich, 1411

Scottish Gaelic is one of the languages of Scotland, along with Scots and English. It is closely related to Irish Gaelic, and both belong to the Celtic group of the Indo-European language family. Scholars have suggested that Celtic-speaking peoples moved into Ireland and Britain some time before 300 B.C.E. and that the dialects of these British Celts later split into two groups: P-Celtic, including what we know today as Welsh, Breton, and Cornish; and Q-Celtic, including Irish, Scottish Gaelic, and Manx (the Gaelic of the Isle of Man).

'S ge iomadh cáinain
Bho linn Bhàile fhuaire
A's slochd sin Adhaimh
'S i Ghàidhlig a thug bòidh

And though many a language
From the time of Babel
That race of Adam got,
It is Gaelic that won fame.
—Alexander MacDonald, 1698-1770

From Ireland (referred to as Scotia in Latin), the speakers of Gaelic, the Scotti, migrated east across the sea sometime in the 5th century C.E. and gave their name to Scotland. They spread north, east, and south to achieve in about 1100 C.E. what was probably the language's greatest extent as the speech of kings and people. Gaelic place-names reflect settlement patterns, and their presence in the Scottish Border country near England indicates the extent and status of the Gaelic-speaking settlers of this period. Close association with the Celtic church in Scotland and Ireland in these centuries created a rich tradition of literature. A Gaelic kingdom emerged in the 14th and 15th centuries, as a probable reaction to the Viking invaders of the north and west coasts. Called the Lordship of the Isles, its power and success led, in turn, to its destruction by the Kings of Scots. Successive phases of persecution of the language followed, with laws passed to weaken Gaelic culture and enforce education in English, and with policies that identified the Gaelic language as hostile to church and state. The missionary Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, for example, pursued a policy in the 18th century of “extirpating the Irish language” (i.e., Scottish Gaelic) from the Highlands and Islands. In spite of the cultural pressure and political hostility of the Scots and English languages, the areas of Gaelic speech remained stable and coterminous with the Highlands and Islands of Scotland until the 19th century.
The prehistoric Callanish Stones document the ancient history of the Gaelic-speaking Isle of Lewis. Scotland’s main concentration of Gaelic speakers now live in the Western Isles (Outer Hebrides), the Western Highlands, and in and around Glasgow. © VisitScotland/ScottishViewpoint

Following the defeat of the Jacobite Rebellion led by “Bonnie Prince Charlie” in 1745, economic collapse in the Scottish Highlands and Islands forced emigration on people who created Gaelic colonies overseas such as in Nova Scotia.

Chi thu buailtean a' chruidh-laoigh
Air gach taobh anns a' ghleann,
A' toirt taisbean le 'n cuid sgeul
Air na treum-fhir a bh' ann.

You’ll see the folds of the milk-cows
On each side of the glen,
Giving witness by their stories
To the heroes that were there.
—Donald MacDonald, 1926–2000

The 1991 population census of the British Isles recorded nearly 70,000 people as being able to speak, read, or write Scottish Gaelic, and this represents 1.4 percent of the Scottish population. A hundred years earlier, nearly a quarter of Scots were familiar with the language, but official insistence on literacy in English and statutory prohibition of Gaelic in schools under the Education Act of 1872 seriously eroded the language’s base. It survived most strongly as an informal medium of communication in family and home, and to a lesser extent in the church. The main concentrations of Gaelic speakers are now in the Western Isles (Outer Hebrides), the Western Highlands, and in and around Glasgow. A sharp decline in the number of Gaelic speakers, particularly in the late 20th century, has led the government to take measures to support Gaelic language, culture, and identity. A Minister for Gaelic has been appointed, and Gaelic is used in broadcasting and at all levels of education from pre-school to college.

A Highland Association, An Comunn Gàidhealach, founded in 1891 to encourage the use of Scottish Gaelic, instituted an annual music festival, the Mòd, which is still celebrated. In recent decades the Scottish musical scene as a whole has been enriched by Gaelic rock groups such as Runrig and Capercaillie, who have fearlessly transposed traditional modes into modern idioms. Music and arts are supported in the community by a popular movement—Na Fèisean—ensuring dedication to and a love of Gaelic culture and a supply of young performers to sustain a worldwide popularity of Scottish Gaelic song and instrumental music. In spite of a sense of declining numbers, Scottish Gaelic still has a very rich published literature, drawing strength and confidence from a “revival” beginning in the 1930s, associated particularly with Sorley MacLean (1911–96). Gaelic writers have followed the example of the literary and political “renaissance” in Scots as well as movements in contemporary English and European poetry in exploring the human condition in a changing and threatening world. In the experience of Gaelic, the sense of place, of ancestry, and of the inner strength of the language continues to sustain it.

Fuirichidh mi ris a' bhèith
Gus an tig i mach an Càrn,
Gus am bi am bearradh uile
O Bheinn na Lice f' a sgàil.

I will wait for the birch wood
Until it comes up by the Cairn,
Until the whole ridge from Beinn na Lice
Will be under its shade.
—Sorley MacLean, “Hallaig,” 1970
Scots

BILLY KAY

Scots shares the same Germanic roots as English, but the two languages developed separately during the Middle Ages when Scotland and England were independent, mutually hostile nations. Then, Scots absorbed distinctive words from French, Dutch, and Scandinavian languages, while ironically preserving its Old English roots better than the English of England in words like hame (home) and stane (stone). Scots was spoken by every sector of Lowland society.

The hegemony of Scots was eroded by important historical events such as the Reformation (16th century), when the first vernacular Bibles were printed in English; the Union of the Crowns (1603), when Scots poets lost royal patronage; and the political union of Scotland and England in 1707, when the prestige of the language of the larger partner, England, was firmly established.

Yet three centuries later, despite enormous pressures toward linguistic conformity, Scots remains a vital component of Scottish cultural life, the medium of plays, novels, poetry, and a rich and beautiful song tradition.

Scotland has always been a multi-lingual country, from the founding of the nation, when French, Flemish, Gaelic, and Scots were spoken in the early towns, right to the present day when the Celtic language Gaelic and the Germanic languages English and Scots remain preeminent. Of these three languages, Scots is by far the most neglected and held down [oppressed] in official terms, yet ironically is spoken in one dialect or another by the majority of the folk. With very little status, it is mostly used in informal, familiar situations.

Sometimes I compare it to an underground activity practiced by consenting adults in the privacy of their own homes! Despite this restricted use of the language for a long time, it has always been the medium of a great literary and folk tradition that the writers of the present day are keen to continue.
The writers are also part of a process to normalize Scots, take it from the private to the public domain and give people a sense of what it was and what it will be again—a language of dignity and vigor that will always express the spirit of the Scottish people and their ties to the land and its culture.

In doing this we are taking part in a process that is smashing barriers and building bridges all over Europe, where once suppressed languages and nations are reasserting themselves. They are insisting for their voice to be heard in a Europe of a hundred flags and a hundred tongues, a Europe where linguistic diversity is regarded with pleasure rather than with suspicion. For the relationship between Scots and English has many parallels in a number of European countries: Friesian and Dutch in the Low Countries, Occitan and French in France, Catalan and Spanish, or Galician and Spanish in Spain. All these languages came from similar roots, but went their own path through belonging to separate political entities.

In most cases it was only when they became bound to political unions with more powerful neighbors that their mother tongues started to erode in competition with the standard language of the centralized states they belonged to. The nature of a people's identity, however, is such that all these languages have borne the strikes against them and lived on in a more restricted use as the everyday language of the people. In many cases this strong identification with the languages made those who spoke them all the more determined to hold on to what they had.

It is all about elevating the vernacular of the people to its rightful place in our national life.

Hugh MacDiarmid (1892–1978), the father of the Scottish Literary Renaissance, wrote the words that give hope for the future of Scots as a living European language of the 21st century. "For we hae faith in Scotland's hidden powers. The present's theirs, but a' the past an future's ours."
Master kiltmaker Robert McBain lays out tartan cloth. Photo by Nancy Groce © Smithsonian Institution

James Wylie puts the final touches on a curling stone at Kays of Scotland. Photo by Nancy Groce © Smithsonian Institution

Louise Butler lives in the Scottish Borders and has worked as an independent curator and project manager since 1987, having previously held senior curatorial posts in a number of U.K. museums, including The Embroiderers’ Guild at Hampton Court Palace, London. Her special interests include costume, textiles, and contemporary crafts, and Scotland’s indigenous skills.

Traditional Crafts in Contemporary Scotland

LOUISE BUTLER

Scotland, a land of rich contrasts, stretches four hundred miles from its border with England to its most northerly point, where the mainland drops from cliffs onto white sand beaches and out into the cold North Sea. From here, you can almost touch the Orkney Islands, but it is a further five hours’ sea travel to the remote Shetland Islands. In the rolling hills, famous salmon rivers, and lush valleys of the Borders and southwest Scotland, farming exists alongside a textile industry that still produces the world’s finest cashmere and tartan cloth. North and west is Glasgow, which, after losing its shipbuilding industry, has re-emerged as a young, hip city with loft apartments, a vibrant arts scene, flagship stores, and international corporate headquarters. To the east is Edinburgh, Scotland’s capital and since 1999 home to the Scottish Parliament. The smaller sister cities of Stirling, Perth, and Dundee mark the gateway to the Highlands—a patchwork of sea, lochs, mountains, and craggy and heather-covered moorlands, sparsely populated save for the northern cities of Aberdeen and Inverness. Fishing ports mark Scotland’s east coast, and across in the west, the Inner and Outer Hebrides dot the Irish Sea. Scotland’s unique identity sets it apart from anywhere else in Britain.

Each culture has its own craft traditions, representing skills and trades originally acquired and practiced out of functional necessity. Scotland retains a wide range of distinctive crafts that have their roots in its social, crofting (small farming), and industrial past. These indigenous crafts are part of a continuing tradition, using materials and techniques transmitted from person to person across generations. Many of the skills have a direct connection with working the land, fishing the sea, and other modes of community subsistence in a particular place. Goods are produced individually by hand or in limited numbers on small-scale machinery. Today, few crafts are commercially viable, and many are practiced only to fulfill immediate needs for income or pieced together with other work, as always in rural life. Tourism plays its part in keeping traditions alive, and output is often stepped up seasonally, as in the Shetland Islands, where local patterned knitting sells well to summer visitors. Many craftspeople are self-employed and live in isolated, rural locations for reasons connected with their craft. For instance, spinners, weavers, and knitters may rear small flocks of rare-breed sheep to provide wool; basket makers may live in an area suitable for growing the willow they use.

Shetland is now the only place in Scotland that retains formal teaching of a traditional craft—knitting—in the school curriculum. Throughout Scotland, craft associations and guilds provide informal support for exchanging skills and sharing information through newsletters, exhibitions, workshops, and demonstrations. The annual Royal Highland Show—a huge agricultural show that is held, ironically, on the outskirts of Edinburgh—includes a major handcraft competition, and craftspeople from all over Scotland send work to be judged. This might include woven Harris Tweed from the Hebrides, oat-straw “kishie” baskets from Shetland, hooded Orkney chairs, fine Ayrshire whitework embroidery, handspun wools colored with natural plant dyes, shepherd’s crooks, and sticks of hazel wood topped with finely carved and polished ram’s horn. Other items still manufactured in Scotland’s traditional yet evolving styles are golf clubs, granite curling stones, tartans and kilts,

Scotland retains a wide range of distinctive crafts that have their roots in its social, crofting, and industrial past.
Contemporary-style sporrans made by Marcus Eagleton, Perthshire. Photo by Nancy Groce © Smithsonian Institution

A teapot by Dunblane silversmith Graham Stewart beautifully combines traditional Scottish silversmithing skills with innovative design. Photo courtesy Graham Stewart

Handknit goods in a range of knitting styles, gossamer fine knitted lace, boats, musical instruments (fiddle and Celtic harp or clarsach, Lowland and Highland pipes), staved wooden buckets, and ceremonial drinking vessels (the Orkney "bride's cog" and quaichs).

A few of the crafts can stand as uniquely Scottish icons. The kilt, for instance, is considered Scotland's national dress and is widely worn by men for ceremonial occasions, at ceilidhs (parties), and as wedding attire, and it is increasingly popular for less formal events. Kilts in various forms have been worn in the Highlands of Scotland since well before the Jacobite uprising of 1745. Originally a single piece of cloth wrapped around the body and gathered at the waist with the loose end thrown over the shoulder, today's kilt is more styled, but it continues to be made from a single 8-foot long piece of tartan cloth. Making the garment demands significant tailoring skill. Clients look to master kilt makers who hand-build their kilts by calculating pleats to the individual customer's height and girth, matching and manipulating the check pattern on the tartan, and then hand-stitching and finishing each kilt to precise measurements. To maintain these skills and enhance economic opportunities, the first-ever kilt-making school was opened in Keith, Morayshire, in 1994. It now trains a dozen students each year to become master kilt makers.

Textile skills have played a huge part in the Scottish economy over the centuries. Until industrialization, spinning, dyeing, and weaving were done by hand. There were tens of thousand of hand-weavers across Scotland, and they used only natural plant dyes along with imported cochineal and indigo for coloring yarns until chemical dyes were introduced in 1856. Naturally dyed and handwoven cloth has special qualities that may not be appreciated today when most textile production is mechanized and fabric is factory made. However, within a network of enthusiastic guild and society members across Scotland, there are still a good number of individuals who are carrying out all these processes on a small scale and sometimes generating a healthy living from their craft.

During the mid-19th century, landowners on the Isle of Harris encouraged their tenant crofters to expand the home industry of weaving beyond domestic use to sell cloth on the mainland. The Orb and Cross Certification Mark for Harris Tweed was registered in 1905, for use in authenticating the origin and quality of the cloth. Today, the production of Harris Tweed is managed by three large tweed mills on the adjoining island of Lewis, but the cloth continues to be woven on crofts throughout the islands, in accordance with local regulations. Tourists to the Western Isles (Outer Hebrides) can still visit small weaving sheds, meet the weavers, and purchase tweed cloth at the farm gate.

Several unique regional knitting stitches and patterns are still used in Scotland. The craft of knitting, acquired in childhood through example, has been mostly held in women’s hands. It is a portable craft, needing little more work space than that between eye, hands, and knee. The seamless fisherman’s sweater of Eriskay in the Outer Hebrides is knitted with motifs reflecting the island’s fishing industry: starfish, anchor, harbor steps. A cooperative of knitters on the island produces a small number of hand-knitted garments every few weeks. The village of Sanquhar in southwest Scotland is still home to several masters of a distinctive, black-and-white, intricately patterned knitting—the major product being gloves, with the wearer’s initials worked into the cuff. Shetland knitting is recognized for its vibrant, multicolored patterns and fine, single-ply knitted lace, mostly worked from graphs recorded and passed down through families. The Shetland College of Textiles now offers training in the latest technology, ensuring a continuation of skills and an interesting fusion of design.

Essentially farming communities, Orkney, Shetland, and Fair Isle grow a particular type of black oats, the straw from which is cropped, cleaned, and made into stitched baskets or “kishies.” The kishie was originally used to carry peat fuel, seaweed, or crops. Crops were often measured in kishie-fills; as one kishie maker remembers, “The summer of 1947 was exceptionally good, and we had a tally of 416 kishies of tatties (potatoes) that year.” The same stitched-straw technique is used to create chair backs in Orkney and the other northern isles. These islands are mostly barren of trees, so chair makers have always relied on scavenged driftwood or imported timber for the joinery in their chairs.

This element of resourcefulness underlies all indigenous crafts. Although producing goods in small numbers by hand methods has generally ceased to be profitable in economic terms, nothing can beat the satisfaction of creating something from very little, the pleasure of being part of a long tradition, and the exceptional qualities that an individually created craft product has to offer.
FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

The following organizations are excellent gateways through which to find out more about Scottish history and traditional culture:

ARTS AND CULTURE
Scottish Arts Council (Edinburgh) <www.scottisharts.org.uk>
National Museums of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nms.ac.uk>
The National Piping Centre of Scotland (Glasgow) <www.thepipencingentre.co.uk>
The Netherbow: Scottish Storytelling Centre (Edinburgh) <www.storytellingcentre.org.uk>
Scottish Poetry Library (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
The Scottish Arts Council (Edinburgh) <www.scottisharts.org.uk>
Scottish History and Traditional Culture: The Netherbow: Scottish Storytelling Centre (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>

HISTORY AND GENEALOGY
AncestralScotland.com <www.AncestralScotland.com>
National Archives of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nas.gov.uk>
National Library of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nls.ac.uk>
National Trust for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nts.org.uk>
Saltire Society (Edinburgh) <www.saltiresociety.org.uk>
Scottish Archive Network (Edinburgh) <www.scan.org.uk>

EDUCATION
Centre for Political Song, Glasgow Caledonian University <polsong.gcal.ac.uk>
Glasgow-Strathclyde School of Scottish Studies (Glasgow) <www.strath.gla.ac.uk/scotstudies>
Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama/Scottish Program (Glasgow) <www.rsamad.ac.uk>
General Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
University of Aberdeen, Elphinstone Institute (Aberdeen) <www.abdn.ac.uk/elphinstone>
University of Edinburgh, Celtic and Scottish Studies (Edinburgh) <www.celscots.ed.ac.uk>

SCOTTISH HISTORY: THE CULTURE AND THE FOLK

TRADITIONAL SONG AND MUSIC IN SCOTLAND

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL SOURCES

AncestralScotland.com <www.AncestralScotland.com>
National Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
National Archives of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nas.gov.uk>
National Library of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nls.ac.uk>
National Trust for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nats.org.uk>
Saltire Society (Edinburgh) <www.saltiresociety.org.uk>
Scottish Archive Network (Edinburgh) <www.scan.org.uk>

EDUCATION
Centre for Political Song, Glasgow Caledonian University <polsong.gcal.ac.uk>
Glasgow-Strathclyde School of Scottish Studies (Glasgow) <www.strath.gla.ac.uk/scotstudies>
Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama/Scottish Program (Glasgow) <www.rsamad.ac.uk>
General Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
University of Aberdeen, Elphinstone Institute (Aberdeen) <www.abdn.ac.uk/elphinstone>
University of Edinburgh, Celtic and Scottish Studies (Edinburgh) <www.celscots.ed.ac.uk>

SCOTTISH HISTORY: THE CULTURE AND THE FOLK

TRADITIONAL SONG AND MUSIC IN SCOTLAND

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL SOURCES

AncestralScotland.com <www.AncestralScotland.com>
National Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
National Archives of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nas.gov.uk>
National Library of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nls.ac.uk>
National Trust for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nats.org.uk>
Saltire Society (Edinburgh) <www.saltiresociety.org.uk>
Scottish Archive Network (Edinburgh) <www.scan.org.uk>

EDUCATION
Centre for Political Song, Glasgow Caledonian University <polsong.gcal.ac.uk>
Glasgow-Strathclyde School of Scottish Studies (Glasgow) <www.strath.gla.ac.uk/scotstudies>
Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama/Scottish Program (Glasgow) <www.rsamad.ac.uk>
General Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
University of Aberdeen, Elphinstone Institute (Aberdeen) <www.abdn.ac.uk/elphinstone>
University of Edinburgh, Celtic and Scottish Studies (Edinburgh) <www.celscots.ed.ac.uk>

SCOTTISH HISTORY: THE CULTURE AND THE FOLK

TRADITIONAL SONG AND MUSIC IN SCOTLAND

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL SOURCES

AncestralScotland.com <www.AncestralScotland.com>
National Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
National Archives of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nas.gov.uk>
National Library of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nls.ac.uk>
National Trust for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nats.org.uk>
Saltire Society (Edinburgh) <www.saltiresociety.org.uk>
Scottish Archive Network (Edinburgh) <www.scan.org.uk>

EDUCATION
Centre for Political Song, Glasgow Caledonian University <polsong.gcal.ac.uk>
Glasgow-Strathclyde School of Scottish Studies (Glasgow) <www.strath.gla.ac.uk/scotstudies>
Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama/Scottish Program (Glasgow) <www.rsamad.ac.uk>
General Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
University of Aberdeen, Elphinstone Institute (Aberdeen) <www.abdn.ac.uk/elphinstone>
University of Edinburgh, Celtic and Scottish Studies (Edinburgh) <www.celscots.ed.ac.uk>

SCOTTISH HISTORY: THE CULTURE AND THE FOLK

TRADITIONAL SONG AND MUSIC IN SCOTLAND

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL SOURCES

AncestralScotland.com <www.AncestralScotland.com>
National Register Office for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Historic Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>
National Archives of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nas.gov.uk>
National Library of Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nls.ac.uk>
National Trust for Scotland (Edinburgh) <www.nats.org.uk>
Saltire Society (Edinburgh) <www.saltiresociety.org.uk>
Scottish Archive Network (Edinburgh) <www.scan.org.uk>
SCOTTISH DANCE

Gaelic Scotland, the Official Tourism Portal <www.gaelic-scotland.co.uk>

The Gaelic Books Council <www.gaelicbooks.net>

Sabhail Mór Ostaig (The Gaelic College) <www.smo.uhi.ac.uk>

An Comunn Gàidhealach (The Gaelic Society) <www.accomunn.co.uk>

PANTO IN SCOTLAND

An Annotated Bibliography of Commedia dell’Arte, Panto, Music Hall, and Other Diversions <www.214b.com>

SCOTTISH GAELIC

Scottish Basketmakers Circle <www.scottishbasketmakerscircle.org>

Scottish Tartans Authority <www.tartansauthority.com>

The Harris Tweed Authority <www.harristweed.com>

Shetland Knitwear Trades Association <www.zetnet.co.uk/skta>
General Festival Information

FESTIVAL HOURS
The Opening Ceremony for the Festival takes place at Appalachia's Harmony Stage at 11 a.m., Wednesday, June 25. Thereafter, Festival hours are 11 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. with special evening events daily. See the schedule on pages 96–119 for details.

FESTIVAL SALES
Traditional Appalachian, Malian and Scottish food is sold. See the site map on pages 116–17 for locations. A variety of crafts, books, and Smithsonian Folkways recordings related to the Festival are sold in the Festival Marketplace on the Mall-side lawn of the National Museum of American History located at Madison Drive and 12th Street.

PRESS
Visiting members of the press should register at the Press tent located near the Metro Station on the Mall at Jefferson Drive and 12th Street.

FIRST AID
A first aid station is located near the Metro Station on the Mall at Jefferson Drive and 12th Street.

RESTROOMS & TELEPHONES
There are outdoor facilities for the public and visitors with disabilities located near all of the program areas on the Mall. Additional restroom facilities are available in each of the museum buildings during visiting hours. Public telephones are available on the site, opposite the National Museums of American History and Natural History, and inside the museums.

LOST & FOUND/LOST PEOPLE
Lost items or family members should be turned in or retrieved at the Volunteer tent located near the Metro Station on the Mall at Jefferson Drive and 12th Street.

METRO STATIONS
Metro trains will be running every day of the Festival. The Festival site is easily accessible from the Smithsonian and Federal Triangle stations on the Blue and Orange Lines.

SERVICES FOR VISITORS WITH DISABILITIES
To make the Festival more accessible to visitors who are deaf or hard of hearing, audio loops are installed in the main music tent in each program area. American Sign Language interpreters are on site every day of the Festival. Check the printed schedule and signs for interpreted programs. Special requests for interpreters should be made at the Volunteer Tent. Service animals are welcome. Other modes of interpretation will be provided if a request is made a week in advance by calling (202) 275-0572 (TTY) or (202) 275-1905 (voice).

Large-print copies of the daily schedule and audio-cassette versions of the program book are available at Festival information kiosks and the Volunteer tent.

A limited number of wheelchairs are available at the Volunteer tent. Volunteers are on call to assist wheelchair users and to guide visitors with visual impairments on an as available basis. There are a few designated parking spaces for visitors with disabilities along both Mall drives. These spaces have three-hour time restrictions.

THUNDERSTORMS
In case of a severe rainstorm visitors should go inside a museum. If museums are closed, visitors should go into the Metro station. Summer rainstorms are usually brief, and often the Festival resumes operations within an hour or two. In the event of a severe thunderstorm the Festival must close. Do not remain under a tent or a tree!

Teachers Symposium

The symposium gives teaching professionals a chance to learn about Malian culture, history, and geography. Teachers will hear presentations from Malian educators, area experts, and artists, observe and interact with Festival participants, and regroup to share thoughts and experiences. Teachers will share lesson plans and strategies with educators from Mali and take that knowledge back to their classrooms. The symposium presents a unique opportunity for all educators, especially those whose curriculum specifically includes the ancient kingdom or modern country of Mali.

Ongoing Festival Presentations
In addition to the daily scheduled performances, there will be ongoing demonstrations in the individual program areas, as indicated on the site map on pages 116–17.

Appalachia: Demonstrations of railroad work and song by the Buckingham Lining Bar Gang, June 25 through June 29.

Mali: Demonstrations in textiles arts (carding, spinning, hand weaving of wool and cotton fabrics, dyeing techniques of mudcloth [bogolan], indigo, and tie-dye damask, hand and machine embroidery, and fashion design), metalwork and jewelry, leather work, baskets, straw mats and jewelry, pottery, sculpture, traditional medicine and the arts of adornment (henna decoration, hair braiding and hairstyling with beads, and incense-making).

Scotland: Demonstrations of tartan weaving and designing; Harris Tweed weaving; silversmithing; Shetland basket-weaving; Orkney chair-making; kilt-making; whisky-distilling and the related skills of malting, cooperage, and coppersmithing; Fair Isle boat-building; heraldry; genealogy and genealogical research; golf club and curling stone making; knitting traditions from Shetland, Fair Isle, and Sanguhar; tapestry weavings; sporran-making; stonemasonry; gilding and restoration crafts; harp- and bagpipe-making.

ESPECIALLY FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES
The Family Activity Tent will draw performers from the Appalachia, Scotland, and Mali programs for interactive music activities, storytelling, puppet shows, and children's games.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Opening Ceremony</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) with the Green Grass Cloggers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Bluegrass: The VW Boys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music Band: The Celtibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: Jake Krack and Lester and Linda Mc mumbers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>African-American Traditions: Sparky and Rhonda Rucker, Nat Reese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celtibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>African-American Traditions: John Dee Holeman, Sparky and Rhonda Rucker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Storytelling—Jack Tales: Orville Hicks, Frank Proffitt, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Storytelling—Musical Storytellers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Kitchen—“Regional Sampling”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Kentucky Barbeque: Bennie Massey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:45</td>
<td>Appalachian Cooking w/Shiitake Mushrooms: Fred McClellan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Tennessee Salsa: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Mexican Bread: Bennie Massey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Cherokee Bean Bread: Marie Junaluska</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:45</td>
<td>Modern Appalachian Cooking: Harvey Christie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Tennessee/Mexican Cooking: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:15</td>
<td>Musical Storytellers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00</td>
<td>Yaya Coulibaly: Malian Puppets &amp; Marionettes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:45</td>
<td>Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7:30</td>
<td>Evening Concert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8:00</td>
<td>Tarit: Tuareg Song and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8:45</td>
<td>Tarit: Tuareg Song and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Notes:
- Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington
- Bamako Stage
- Heritage Stage
- Appalachia: Heritage and Harmony
- Timbuktu Stage

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
Talking Tree

12:00 Yaya Coulibaly; Marionettes & Puppets
12:45 Growing Up in Mali
1:30 What Makes a Woman Beautiful?
2:15 Donso N’goni: Hunters’ Music
3:00 Keeping in Touch with Home
3:45 Malian Textiles: Processes and Patterns
4:30 Malian Clothing Designers and Use of Malian Textiles
5:15 Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers
6:00 Malian Pottery
6:45 Malians in the U.S.

Malian Foodways

12:00 Rice Cakes: Koumba Kanté
1:00 Tiou ña ña: Khadiatou Sow
2:00 Wosobula na (sauce with potato leaves): Ami Sow
3:00 Añu (bean fritters) and Spicy Sauce: Kadia Soukou
4:00 Fonio (a grain served like couscous): Fatoumata Sissoko
5:00 Okra Sauce: Mariam Diarra, Gan Kénena
6:00 Almanga Mafé and Widjila: Maimouna Coulibaly Camara

SCOTLAND AT THE SMITHSONIAN

Fèis Stage

12:15 Fiddlers’ Bid: Music from Shetland
1:15 Alasdair Fraser: Scottish Fiddle
2:15 Scottish Ballads: History in Song
3:15 Gaelic Songs of Love & Work
4:00 Shetland Dance Workshop
4:30 Fiddlers’ Bid: Music from Shetland

Ceilidh Stage

12:30 The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance
1:30 Bothy Ballads & Songs of Rural Scotland
2:15 Harp, Pipes & Scottish Instrumental Music
3:00 The Singing Kettle: Scottish Children’s Songs
4:00 Alasdair Fraser: Scottish Fiddle
4:45 Heroes, Heroines & Villains in Scottish Ballads

5:30–7:00 EVENING CONCERT
The Occasionals: Scottish Dance Workshop & Ceilidh

Panto Stage

12:00 Panto!: Cinderella & Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater
1:00 The Singing Kettle: Scottish Children’s Songs
2:00 Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater
3:00 Stories of Scottish Travellers and Traveling
4:00 Clarsach: Tunes & Airs for Scottish Harp: Billy Jackson
4:30 Panto!: Cinderella & Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater

Narrative Stage

12:15 Gaelic Songs of the Sea
1:00 Western Isles Storytellers: Life in the Outer Hebrides
1:45 Scottish Stories of Wise & Foolish People
2:30 North Sea Oil: Life on the Off-Shore Rigs
3:15 Weaving Scottish Tartan: Legend, Lore, and Craft
4:00 Scottish Small Pipes
4:45 Doric Songs & Stories from Aberdeen

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

FAMILY ACTIVITY TENT

12:00 Appalachian Songs & Stories
12:30 Scottish Toys & Games
1:15 Cherokee Stories
2:00 Appalachian Songs & Stories
2:45 Dr. Mc What?: Tartan Time Lord
3:30 Malian Names & Greetings
4:15 Malian Puppets
5:00 Malian Music & Dance

JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

Millennium Stage

Please see pages 118–19 for detailed schedule.

A Bambara puppet masquerade.
Photo © Mary Jo Arnoldi

Schedules subject to change.
APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Bluegrass: The VW Boys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celtibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State University Student Bluegrass Band</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Old-Time String Music: Jake Krack and Lester and Linda Mc Cumbers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celtibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) with the Green Grass Cloggers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State University Student Bluegrass Band</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: Jake Krack and Lester and Linda Mc Cumbers</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Appalachian Kitchen—“Chicken du Jour”

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Fried Chicken: Fred McClellan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Mexican Dips: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:45</td>
<td>Barbeque Chicken: Bennie Massey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Cherokee Mustard Greens: Marie Junaluska</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Chicken w/Salsa: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Potato Salad: Bennie Massey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Gourmet Chicken, Appalachian-style: Harvey Christie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Cherokee Chicken and Dumplings: Marie Junaluska</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MALI: FROM TIMBUKTU TO WASHINGTON

Bamako Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Groupe Sogonikon: Wassoulou Masked Dancers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Dogon Masked Dance Group</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets &amp; Marionettes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Donso N’goni: Hunters’ Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Timbuktu Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Tartit: Tuareg Song and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Krin de Birgo: Fulani Calabash Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Tartit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>N’goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Talking Tree

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Kora Music from Ensemble Instrument</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Growing Up in Mali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Planning a Wedding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Malian Builders</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Musical Storytellers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Keeping in Touch with Home</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Malian Leather Work</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>N’goni Music from Ensemble Instrument</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Women and Business</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Malian Foodways

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Malian Beverages: Aissa Touré</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Timbuktu Couscous: Maimouna Coulibaly Camara</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Beef Feet: Koumba Kanté</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Tion-tion: Khadiatou Sow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Sëri: Ami Sow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Dég: Kadia Soucko</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Red Sauce: Fatoumata Sissoko</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
Scotland at the Smithsonian

Feis Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Alasdair Fraser: Scottish Fiddle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Scottish Bagpipes with Iain MacDonald: Jigs, Reels &amp; Piobaireachd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance with Maria Leask</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Fiddlers' Bid: Music from Shetland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Brian McNeill: New Songs, Old Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Scottish Ballads of Work and Workers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Workshop &amp; Dance</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Evening Concert

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30</td>
<td>Scottish Love Songs; Requited &amp; Otherwise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00</td>
<td>Shetland Dance Workshop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:30</td>
<td>Fiddler's Bid: Music from Shetland</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Panto Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Doric Children's Songs from North-East Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>New Scottish Songwriters: Fiona Ritchie of NPR's “Thistle &amp; Shamrock”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Scottish Travellers: Culture, Song &amp; Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Music for Children</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Iain MacDonald: Scottish Small Pipes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Narrative Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>North Sea Oil: Culture &amp; Change in North-East Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Scottish Stories and Amazing Tales</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Western Isles Stories: The Outer Hebrides and the Sea</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

Family Activity Tent

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Dr. McWhat?: Tartan Time Lord</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Scottish Bagpipes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Storytelling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Ballads</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Scottish Toys &amp; Games</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Malian Names &amp; Greetings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Malian Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Malian Music &amp; Dance</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Malian Cinema

On the Mall

National Museum of Natural History

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts

Millennium Stage

Please see pages 118–19 for detailed schedule.

Scene from the 2002 panto production of Cinderella at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in Glasgow. Photo courtesy Hugh Hogdart
FRIDAY, JUNE 27

APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State University Student Bluegrass Band</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Old-Time String Music: Lester and Linda McCumbers, Jake and Dara Krack, Kim Johnson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Bluegrass: The VW Boys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) with the Green Grass Cloggers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State University Student Bluegrass Band</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) with the Green Grass Cloggers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Storytelling—Jack Tales: Orville Hicks, Frank Proffitt, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00</td>
<td>Gospel Music and Coal Mining Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:45</td>
<td>Ballads and Stories from the Mountains: Ginny Hawker and Tracy Schwartz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7:30</td>
<td>West Virginia String Band: Jake Krack and Lester and Linda McCumbers</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bristol Mural Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>West Virginia Banjo: Dwight Diller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>African-American Traditions: Sparky and Rhonda Rucker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Ballads and Stories from Madison County: Sheila Kay Adams</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>West Virginia Banjo: Dwight Diller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Cherokee Tales: Lloyd Arneach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>North Carolina Blues: John Dee Holeman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>N'goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Narrative: Technology in Appalachia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Kitchen—“Fresh from the Garden”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00</td>
<td>Kentucky Mustard Greens: Bennie Massey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:45</td>
<td>Kale, Cherokee Style: Marie Junalasuka</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7:30</td>
<td>Tomato Jam from Tennessee: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Evening Concert

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Bluegrass with the VW Boys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>N'goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Tomato Jam from Tennessee: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Bamako Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali Festival Program Closed

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:45</td>
<td>Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Dogon Masked Dance Group</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Timbuktu Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Tartit: Tiareg Music and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Fashion Show</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali Festival Program Closed

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>N'goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:45</td>
<td>Tartit: Tiareg Music and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Donso N'goni: Hunters' Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Evening Concert

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Kitchen—“Fresh from the Garden”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:30-9:00</td>
<td>National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00-9:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets and Marionettes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Religion in Daily Life</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Evening Concert

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Musical Storytellers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:45</td>
<td>Malian Jewelry and Metalwork</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Néba Solo: Balafon Workshop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Planning a Wedding</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
Malian Foodways—
Planning a Feast for a Wedding

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Labadja: Mariam Diarra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Almaga Maffe: Fatoumata Sissoko</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Bissap: Aissa Touré</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali Festival Program Closed
1:00–3:00 for Friday Prayer

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Law: Koumbia Kanté</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Widiila: Khadiatou Sow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Couscous Tombuctien: Maimouna Coulibaly Camara</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Dégé au pain de singe: Kadia Souko</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scot land at the Smithsonian

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Children's Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Scottish Women's Songs about Scottish Men</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Brian McNeill &amp; Ed Miller: Scotland the Real</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>The Occasional: Scottish Dance Workshop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Scottish Bagpipes Great &amp; Small</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Alasdair Fraser: Strathspeys, Jigs &amp; Reels</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Fiddlers' Bid: Music from Shetland</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Ceilidh Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Songs &amp; Tunes from Gaelic Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Alasdair Fraser: Scottish Fiddle Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Scottish Bagpipes Large &amp; Small: Iain MacDonald &amp; Hamish Moore</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Fiddlers' Bid: Music from Shetland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Tunes &amp; Airs for Scottish Harp &amp; Fiddle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Songs &amp; Poetry of Robert Burns</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Songs from Northern Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Brian McNeill: Songs of Scots at Home &amp; Abroad</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Panto Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>New Scottish Songwriters: Fiona Ritchie of NPR's &quot;Thistle &amp; Shamrock&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella &amp; Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Music for Children (&amp; Parents)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Stories of the Shetland Isles</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

FAMILY ACTIVITY TENT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Stories of Good &amp; Bad Scottish Children</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs &amp; Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Cherokee Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Scottish Toys &amp; Games</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Dr. McWhat?: Tartan Time Lord</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Malian Greetings &amp; Names</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Malian Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Malian Music</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MALIAN CINEMA

ON THE MALL

National Museum of Natural History

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

Millennium Stage

Please see pages 118–19 for detailed schedule.
SATURDAY, JUNE 28

Appalachia: Heritage and Harmony

Harmony Stage

11:00  Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard)
11:45  Appalachian Bluegrass: The VW Boys
12:30  Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celtibillies
1:30  Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State University Student Bluegrass Band
2:15  Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) with the Green Grass Cloggers
3:00  Appalachian Bluegrass: The VW Boys
3:45  Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celtibillies
4:30  Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State University Student Bluegrass Band

Evening Concert

Dance Party with Jake and Dara Kack, Lester and Linda McCumbers, and Kim Johnson

Heritage Stage

11:00  West Virginia Blues: Nat Reese
11:45  Appalachian Storytelling—Jack Tales: Orville Hicks, Frank Proffitt, Jr.
12:30  Ballads from the Mountains: Ginny Hawker and Tracy Schwarz
1:30  Ballads and Stories: Bobby McMillon
2:15  Gospel Music and Coal Mining Songs: Dorothy Myles
3:15  Ballads from the Mountains: Sheila Kay Adams
4:00  Cherokee Storytelling: Lloyd Arneach
4:45  African-American Traditions: Sparky and Rhonda Rucker
5:30  Gospel Music and Coal Mining Songs: Dorothy Myles

Bristol Mural Stage

11:00  Guitar Workshop: Wayne Henderson, Doug and Taylor Rorrer
12:00  West Virginia Banjo: Dwight Diller
1:00  North Carolina Blues: John Dee Holeman
2:00  American Indians in Appalachia: Lloyd Arneach, Marie Junaluska
3:00  West Virginia Blues: Nat Reese
4:00  Guitar Workshop: Wayne Henderson, Doug and Taylor Rorrer
5:00  Ballads: Bobby McMillon

Appalachian Kitchen—“Appalachian Staples”

11:00  Catfish: Fred McClellan
11:45  Strawberry/Rhubarb Dumplings: Marie Junaluska
12:30  Meatloaf: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden
1:30  Barbeque: Bennie Massey
2:15  Cornbread: Fred McClellan
3:00  Chicken: Harvey Christie
4:00  Fried Potatoes: Marie Junaluska
4:45  Mexican Dips: Gerald Hawkins and Greg Golden

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Banako Stage

11:00  Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People
11:45  Dogon Masked Dance Group
12:30  So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets
1:15  Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulo Masked Dancers
2:00  Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets & Marionettes
2:45  Donso N’goni: Hunters’ Music
3:30  So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets
4:15  Musical Storytellers
5:00  Dogon Masked Dance Group

Timbuktu Stage

11:00  Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music
11:45  N’goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougou
12:30  Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou
1:15  Fashion Show
2:00  Tattit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance
2:45  Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music
3:30  Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulo Masked Dancers
4:15  Tattit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance
5:00  Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou

Evening Concert

Malian Music: Ensemble Instrumental, National Traditional Ensemble, and Oumou Sangaré, “The Queen of Wassoulo”

Talking Tree

11:00  Wedding Day Stories
11:45  Wedding Preparations
2:00  Family Praise Music
3:00  Growing Up in Mali, Marriage and Song
4:00  Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People

Songster Nat Reese performs at 11 a.m. at the Heritage Stage. Photo by Michael Keller, courtesy Goldenseal Magazine
SCOTLAND AT THE SMITHSONIAN

Fèis Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Songs of Scottish Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Scottish Instrumental Traditions</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>01:00</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Ceilidh Dance Party</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>02:00</td>
<td>Fiddler’s Bid: Music from Shetland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>03:00</td>
<td>Brian McNeill: Songs of Rovers and Roving</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>04:00</td>
<td>Shetland Dance Workshop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>04:30</td>
<td>Fiddlers’ Bid: Music from Shetland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>05:30-7:00</td>
<td>Evening Concert Celebration of the Scottish Fiddle with host Fiona Ritchie</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Ceilidh Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Music for Children (&amp; Parents)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Brian McNeill: Scottish Songs &amp; Tunes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>01:00</td>
<td>Scottish Songs of Music &amp; Musicians</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>02:00</td>
<td>Scottish Bagpipes Great &amp; Small</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>02:30</td>
<td>Johnny Cunningham: Scottish Fiddle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>03:00</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>04:00</td>
<td>Alasdair Fraser: Scottish Fiddle</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Panto Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:15</td>
<td>A Burns Supper: Traditional and Annual Celebration of Scotland’s Bard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13:00</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>02:30</td>
<td>Scottish Masters: Fiona Ritchie of NPR’s “Thistle &amp; Shamrock” interviews fiddler Alasdair Fraser</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>03:15</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Songs for Children</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>04:00</td>
<td>The Relative Merits of Scottish Cities: Glasgow vs. Edinburgh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>04:45</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Narrative Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>North Sea Oil: Life on an Off-Shore Rig</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Shetland Islands: Contemporary Life in an Ancient Land</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Western Isles Stories: Fishing and Fisherfolk of the Outer Hebrides</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Scottish Heraldry: Court of the Lord Lyon King of Arms</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:45</td>
<td>The Art of Distilling Scotch Whisky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Scottish Tartan: Legend, Lore and Craft</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Scots: The Mither Tongue</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Scottish Stories of the Supernatural</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Gaelic Poetry &amp; Love Songs</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

FAMILY ACTIVITY TENT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Songs &amp; Stories from North-East Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Dr. McWhat?: Tartan Time Lord</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs &amp; Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Scottish Toys &amp; Games</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Appalachian Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Malian Greetings &amp; Names</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Malian Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Malian Music</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

Millennium Stage

Please see pages 118–19 for detailed schedule.

---

Kora players perform at 6 p.m. at the Timbuktu Stage. Photo © National Museum of Mali

Malian Foodways—Wedding Meals

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Labadja: Mariam Diarra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Almaga Maffé: Fatoumata Sissoko</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>01:00</td>
<td>Bissap: Aissa Touré</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>02:00</td>
<td>Laro: Koumbia Kanté</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>03:00</td>
<td>Widjila: Kadiatou Sow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>04:00</td>
<td>Couscous Tombuctien: Maimouna Coulibaly Camara</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>05:00</td>
<td>Dégé au pain de singe: Kadia Souko</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
Appalachia: Heritage and Harmony

Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celtibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Appalachian Bluegrass: The VW Boys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>West Virginia Strings: Jake and Dara Krack, Lester and Linda McCumbers, Dwight Diller, Kim Johnson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) and the Green Grass Cloggers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State University Student Bluegrass Band</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) and the Green Grass Cloggers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>African-American Traditions: Nat Reese, Sparky and Rhonda Rucker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Old-Time String Music: Jake Krack and Lester and Linda McCumbers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Bluegrass: The VW Boys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:30-9:00</td>
<td>Evening Concert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Beautiful Beyond: Christian Songs in Native Languages</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Heritage Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Storytelling: Lloyd Arneach, Orville Hicks, Frank Proffitt, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Gospel Music and Coal Mining Songs: Dorothy Myles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: The Celtibillies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Guitar Workshop: Doug and Taylor Rorrer, Wayne Henderson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Gospel Music and Coal Mining Songs: Dorothy Myles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Ballads from the Mountains: Ginny Hawker, Sheila Kay Adams</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Demonstrations daily of railroad work and song by the Buckingham Lining Bar Gang.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Bamako Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonraï People</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Dogon Masked Dance Group</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Fashion Show</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Musical Storytellers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Cross-Program: Baked Goods</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Tartit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Donso N’goni: Hunters’ Music</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Talking Tree

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Donso N’goni: Hunters’ Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Growing Up in Mali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Malian Baskets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>N’goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Malian Health: Traditional Medicine and Karité</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Dogon Divination</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Kora Player and Singer from Ensemble Instrumental</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Malian Pottery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Nomadic Culture</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Malian Foodways

11:00  Gan na (okra sauce): Fatoumata Sissoko
12:00  To: Mariam Diarra
1:00   Hagakoreye: Maimouna Coulibaly Camara
2:00   Widi jila: Aissa Touré
3:00   Fourou fourou (millet cakes): Koumba Kanté
4:00   Moni: Khadiatou Sow
5:00   Saladibulu na (sauce with salad leaves): Ami Sow

Scotland at the Smithsonian

Fèis Stage

11:00  The Singing Kettle: Scottish Songs for Children
12:00  Alasdair Fraser: Scottish Fiddle
1:00   Fiddlers’ Bid: Music from Shetland
2:00   Johnny Cunningham: Virtuoso Scottish Fiddle
3:00   Brian McNeill: Songs of Scots at Home & Abroad
3:45   Scottish Women Sing Songs of Scottish Men (& Vice-Versa)
4:45   Fiddlers’ Bid: Music from Shetland

Ceilidh Stage

11:00  Shetland Dance Workshop
11:30  The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance Band
12:30  Scottish Songs about Food, Drink & Celebration
1:30   Scottish Harp & Bagpipes
2:00   The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance
2:45   Alasdair Fraser: Scottish Fiddle Traditions
3:45   Scottish Instrumental Music: Harp, Small Pipes & Others
4:30   Johnny Cunningham and Alasdair Fraser: Fiddle Workshop

Panto Stage

11:00  Quines, Loons, and Other Folk: Songs from North-East Scotland
11:30  Panto: Cinderella and Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater
12:30  New Scottish Songwriters: Fiona Ritchie of NPR’s “Thistle & Shamrock”
1:30   The Singing Kettle: Scottish Children’s Songs
2:30   Panto: Cinderella and Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater
3:30   Scottish Stories: The Wise & the Foolish
4:30   Panto: Cinderella & Scotland’s Traditional Holiday Theater

Narrative Stage

11:00  Scots: The Mither Tongue
11:45  Gaelic Song & Poetry
12:30  North Sea Oil: Culture & Cultural Change in Aberdeenshire
1:15   Stories of Kings, Queens & Commoners
2:00   Scottish Heraldry: Court of the Lord Lyon King of Arms
2:30   Western Isles Storytellers: Crofting in the Outer Hebrides
3:15   Shetland’s Viking Heritage: Celebrating Up Helly’A’
4:00   The Art of Distilling Scotch Whisky
4:45   Scottish Tartan: Lore and Legend

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

FAMILY ACTIVITY TENT

11:00  Appalachian Songs and Stories
11:45  Scottish Toys & Games
12:30  Appalachian Songs
1:15   Jack Tales

Scottish ceilidh dance music at 11:30 a.m., at the Ceilidh Stage.

1:45   Dr. McWhat?: Tartan Time Lord
3:30   Malian Names & Greetings
4:15   Malian Puppets
5:00   Malian Music & Dance

Malian Cinema

National Museum of Natural History

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts

Millennium Stage

The Festival will be closed Monday, June 30, and Tuesday, July 1.

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
Appalachia: Heritage and Harmony

Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Bluegrass Gospel: Still Waters</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey and Carl Rutherford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>African-American Traditions: Joe Thompson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>African-American Traditions: Joe Thompson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Mountain Banjo: Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 5:30-9:00 | Evening Concert | Ralph Rinzler Memorial Concert: An Evening of Songs by the Carter Family

Heritage Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Music, Tradition, and Family</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Mountain Banjo: Will Keys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Mountain Fiddle: Clyde Davenport</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>North Carolina Strings: Bruce Greene, Don Pedi, and Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Appalachian Storytelling: Bonnie Collins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Narrative Workshop: The Bristol Sessions and the Carter Family</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>West Virginia Liar's Contest with Bonnie Collins and Bill Lepp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Songs and Ballads: Laura Boosinger</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Appalachian Kitchen—“Everything with Apples”

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Apple Butter: Linda Childress</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Apple Pie: Lacey Griffey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Fried Apple Butter Sandwich/Dinner Bucket: Kim Carroll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Cherokee Apple Cake: Marie Junalutska</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Appalachian Wedding Cake: Susan Bridges</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Apple Cobbler: Linda Griffey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Fried Apples and Baked Apples: Kim Carroll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>Fried Pies: Susan Bridges</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bristol Mural Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>North Carolina String Music: Don Pedi and Bruce Greene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Songs: Randy Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Mountain Banjo: Lee Sexton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>West Virginia Guitar: Carl Rutherford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>What Is It Like to Be Appalachian?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Mountain Fiddle: Clyde Davenport</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Bamako Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>N'goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Belé dougou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Tartit/Tuareg Music and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kéné dougou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Donso N'goni: Hunters' Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Yaya Couliba: Puppets &amp; Marionettes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Tartit/Tuareg Music and Sword Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kéné dougou</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Tabital Pulaku

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Fulani Pastoral Music</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Timbuktu Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Dogon Masked Dance Group</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Krin de Birgo: Fulani Calabash Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Members of the Ensemble Instrumental</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Dogon Masked Dance Group</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Talking Tree

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Donso N'goni: Hunters' Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Growing Up in Mali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>What Makes a Woman Beautiful?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Malian Textiles: Patterns and Processes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Musical Storytellers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Keeping in Touch with Home</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Malian Buildings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Members of the Ensemble Instrumental</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Musical Storytellers</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Malian Foodways

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Acre: Kadia Souko</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Fonie: Fatoumata Sissoko</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Tô: Mariam Diarra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Sauce Saladie: Mariama Camara</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Jus de Gengembre: Aissa Touré</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Froufrou (millet cakes): Koumba Kanté</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Alnaga Maffe: Khadiatou Sow</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Scotland at the Smithsonian

Feis Stage

11:00  Wrigley Sisters:
Music from Orkney

12:00  Brian McNeill:
Songs of Scotland

1:00   The Occasionals:
Ceilidh Dance Party

2:00   Johnny & Phil Cunningham:
Virtuoso Scottish Fiddle and Accordion

3:00   Scottish Bagpipes, Great & Small

3:30   Wrigley Sisters:
Music from Orkney

4:30   Scottish Songs of Work & Play

Ceilidh Stage

11:00  The Singing Kettle:
Scottish Music for Children

12:00  Mitchelson Brothers:
Scottish Highland Dance Demonstration & Workshop

12:45  Gaelic Songs of Love and Loss

1:30   The Singing Kettle:
Scottish Music for Children

2:30   Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland

3:15   Mitchelson Brothers:
Highland Dance Demonstration & Workshop

3:45   The Occasionals:
Scottish Ceilidh Dance

4:30   Johnny & Phil Cunningham:
Virtuoso Scottish Fiddle and Accordion

Panto Stage

11:00  Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater

12:00  Jute, Jam & Journalism:
Life and Work in Dundee

12:30  Quines, Loons, and Other Folk: Songs of North-East Scotland

1:00   Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater

2:00   Scottish Cities in Music, Song & Poetry

3:00   Scottish Stories, Legends & Tall Tales

3:45   Ed Miller: Songs of the Scottish Diaspora

4:30   Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater

Narrative Stage

11:00  Scottish Knitting

11:30  Life in the Shetland Islands

12:15  North Sea Oil & North-East Scotland

1:00   Western Isles Storytellers: Growing Up on the Outer Hebrides

1:45   Tradition & Innovation in Scottish Crafts

2:15   Gaelic Songs & Poetry

2:45   Fair Isle: Life in Britain's Most Remote Community

3:15   Curling: Scotland's Olympic Sport

3:45   Properly Attired? What to Wear When

4:30   Castle Upkeep 101: Stone Masonry & Restoration Crafts

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

FAMILY ACTIVITY TENT

11:00  Scottish Toys & Games

11:45  Appalachian Songs

12:30  Appalachian Stories

1:15   Scottish Songs & Stories

2:00   Gaelic Children's Songs

2:45   Appalachian Songs & Instrument Demonstration

3:30   Malian Names & Greetings

4:15   Malian Puppets

5:00   Malian Music

MALIAN CINEMA ON THE MALL

National Museum of Natural History

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

Millennium Stage

Please see pages 118–19 for detailed schedule.

---

* indicates American Sign Language interpreted program

Scotland's Olympic sport, curling, 3:15 p.m. at the Narrative Stage. Photo courtesy Rhona Martin
THURSDAY, JULY 3

Appalachia: Heritage and Harmony

Heritage Stage

11:45 Songs and Ballads: Randy Wilson and Laura Boosinger
12:30 North Carolina Strings: Don Pedi and Bruce Greene, Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon
1:30 Life in the Coal Fields

Appalachian Bluegrass: Don Pedi and Bruce Greene, The O'Quinn Brothers Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon, and the Bluegrass Travelers

Harmony Stage

11:00 Appalachian Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers
11:45 Carcassonne Community Dance Group from Kentucky with Lee Sexton
12:30 Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob
1:30 Galax String Band: The New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters
2:15 Bluegrass Gospel: Still Waters
3:15 Appalachian Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers
4:00 Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey and Carl Rutherford
4:30 Bluegrass Gospel: Still Waters

Evening Concert

6:00-9:00 NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia

Malí: From Timbuktu to Washington

Bamako Stage

11:00 Taritit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance
11:45 Néba solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou
12:30 Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music
1:15 Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets & Marionettes
2:00 N'goussoun: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougou
2:45 Taritit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance
3:30 Néba solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou

Timbuktu Stage

11:00 Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers
11:45 Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People
12:30 Dogon Masked Dance Group
1:15 Krin de Birgo: Fulani Calabash Music
2:00 So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets
2:45 Dogon Masked Dance Group
3:30 Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers
4:15 Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance from the Sonrai People
5:00 Musical Storytellers

Ongoing food demonstrations at the Appalachian Kitchen.
Photo © Mark Sohn

Appalachian Kitchen—“On the Side”

11:00 Greens: Lacey Griffey
11:45 Turnips: Marie Junaluska
12:30 Biscuit Fixings: Linda Childress
1:30 Foraged Plants: Susan Bridges
2:30 Mixed Pickles: Kim Carroll
3:15 Stewed Potatoes: Marie Junaluska
4:00 Cabbage: Lacey Griffey
4:45 Poke Dishes: Susan Bridges

Ongoing food demonstrations at the Appalachian Kitchen.

Photo © Mark Sohn
Scotland at the Smithsonian

Fèis Stage

- 11:00 Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney
- 12:00 Songs of Food, Drink & Conviviality
- 1:00 The Fochabers Fiddlers: Traditional Music from Scotland's Next Generation
- 2:00 Brian McNeill: Songs of Rovers & Roving
- 3:00 Johnny & Phil Cunningham
- 4:00 Scottish Bagpipes, Great & Small
- 4:30 Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland

Evening Concert

- 5:30-7:00 The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance with Special Guests the Mitchelson Brothers

Ceilidh Stage

- 11:00 Scottish Bagpipes!
- 11:45 The Mitchelson Brothers: Highland Dance Demonstration & Workshop
- 12:30 The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance
- 1:30 Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland
- 2:30 Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney
- 3:30 Fochabers Fiddlers: Traditional Music from Scotland's Next Generation
- 4:30 Ed Miller: Songs of Burns & Others

Panto Stage

- 11:00 The Singing Kettle: Children's Music from Scotland
- 12:00 Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater
- 1:00 Gaelic Songs & Poetry
- 2:00 Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater
- 3:00 The Singing Kettle: Scottish Songs for Children
- 3:45 Open Session
- 4:30 Panto: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater

Narrative Stage

- 11:00 Fishing and Fishfolk: The Outer Hebrides and the Sea
- 11:45 The Art of Distilling Scotch Whisky
- 12:30 Scottish Stories of Good & Evil
- 1:15 North Sea Oil: Life on an Off-Shore Rig
- 2:00 Scottish Textiles: Tartan, Tapestry & Tweed
- 2:45 Contemporary Life on Scottish Islands
- 3:30 The Keith Kilt School: Traditional Craft in the Modern World
- 4:00 Scottish Universities: Going to School in Scotland
- 4:45 Rural Scotland

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

Family Activity Tent

- 11:00 Scottish Toys & Games
- 11:45 Appalachian Songs & Instrument Demonstration
- 12:30 Appalachian Stories
- 1:15 Scottish Toys & Games
- 2:00 Scottish Harp
- 2:45 Scottish Stories: Growing Up in Scotland
- 3:30 Malian Names & Greetings
- 4:15 Malian Puppets
- 5:00 Malian Music & Dance

Malian Cinema on the Mall

National Museum of Natural History

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts

Millennium Stage

Please see pages 118-19 for detailed schedule.

---

Dogon dancers at 12:30 p.m.
at the Timbuktu Stage.

Photo © Shawn Davis

---

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
FRIDAY, JULY 4

APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

Harmony Stage

11:00 Appalachian Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers

11:45 Dance: The Carcassonne Community Dance Group from Kentucky with Lee Sexton

12:30 Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob

1:30 Galax String Band: The New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters

2:15 Appalachian Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers

3:15 Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey and Carl Rutherford

4:00 Bluegrass Gospel: Still Waters

4:45 Galax String Band: The New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters

Bristol Mural Stage

11:00 Songs: Laura Boosinger and Randy Wilson

12:00 North Carolina Fiddle: Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon

1:00 North Carolina String Music: Don Pedi and Bruce Greene

2:00 African-American Traditions: Joe Thompson

3:00 Mountain Banjo: Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby

4:00 Mountain Fiddle: Clyde Davenport

5:00 Songs: Randy Wilson

Appalachian Kitchen—“Dinner on the Grounds”

11:00 Apple Butter: Linda Childress

11:45 Fried Chicken: Lacey Griffey

12:30 Cornbread: Marie Junaluska

1:15 Wild Vegetable Stir-Fry with Wild Mushrooms & Venison: Susan Bridges

2:15 Fried Green Tomatoes: Kim Carroll

3:00 Apple Pie: Lacey Griffey

3:45 Chess Pie: Linda Childress

4:45 Wild Strawberry Shortcake with Wild Beverages: Susan Bridges

5:00 Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets & Marionettes

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Bamako Stage

11:00 Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou

11:45 Tariit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance

Mali Festival Program Closed

1:00–3:00 for Friday Prayer

3:00 Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets & Marionettes

3:45 N'goussoun: Bambara Balafon from Bélédougou

4:30 Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music

Timbuktu Stage

11:00 Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the People

11:45 Fashion Show

Mali Festival Program Closed

1:00–3:00 for Friday Prayer

3:00 Dogon Masked Dance Group

3:45 Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers

4:30 So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets

5:30–7:00 Evening Concert

Mali Dance Party: Dogon Masked Dance Group; Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou; Tariit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance; Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People; Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers; Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music

Talking Stage

11:00 Musical Storytellers

12:30 Religion in Daily Life

Mali Festival Program Closed

1:00–3:00 for Friday Prayer

3:00 Members of the Ensemble Instrumental

3:45 Malian Jewelry and Metalwork

4:30 Donso N’goni: Hunters’ Music

5:00 Planning a Wedding

Malian Foodways—Malian Holiday Foods

11:00 Salade à la Malienne: Khadiatou Sow

12:00 Sauce Tomate: Ami Sow

12:30 Tiakry (Dégé): Kadja Soucko

Mali Festival Program Closed

1:00–3:00 for Friday Prayer

3:00 Fonio: Fatoumata Sissoko

3:30 Zammé (rice with fish or meat): Mariam Diarra

4:00 Grilled Lamb: Koumba Kanté

5:00 Tamarind and Ginger Drinks: Aissa Touré

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
Scotland at the Smithsonian

Feis Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Alison Kinnaird &amp; Christine Primrose: Music from Gaelic Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Brian McNeill &amp; Friends: Scottish History in Songs &amp; Ballads</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:15</td>
<td>Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance with Special Guests the Mitchelson Brothers</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Ceilidh Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Mitchelson Brothers: Highland Dance Demonstration and Workshop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:45</td>
<td>Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Gaelic Concert: Music from Scotland's Highlands &amp; Islands</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Ed Miller &amp; Friends: Songs of Robert Burns &amp; Others</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Scottish Instrumental Traditions</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Songs of Scotland and America</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Panto Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Children's Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Adam McNaughtan: Songs &amp; More Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:45</td>
<td>Songs of Quines, Loons &amp; Other Folk from North-East Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Children's Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Narrative Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Great Scots: Stories of Kings, Queens &amp; Commoners</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Growing Up on the Outer Hebrides</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>North Sea Oil: Life on an Off-Shore Rigg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Castle Upkeep 101: Restoring Scotland's Built Heritage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Robert Burns' Poetry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Life on the Shetland Islands</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Scottish Travellers &amp; Travellers' Culture</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:45</td>
<td>Scottish Highland Dance: Talking with the Mitchelson Brothers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Scottish Tartan: Legend, Lore, and Craft</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:45</td>
<td>The Art of Distilling Scotch Whisky</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

FAMILY ACTIVITY TENT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Scottish Toys &amp; Games</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Appalachian Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Appalachian Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Scottish Harp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Scottish Bagpipes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Malian Names &amp; Greetings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Malian Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Malian Music &amp; Dance</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Malian Cinema On the Mall

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts

Please see pages 118–19 for detailed schedule.
SATURDAY, JULY 5

APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

Harmony Stage

11:00  African-American Traditions: Joe Thompson
11:45  Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob
12:30  Bluegrass Gospel: Still Waters
1:30  Dance Party with the Carcassonne Community Dance Group from Kentucky and the Lee Sexton Band
2:15  Mountain Strings: Clyde Davenport and Will Keys
3:15  Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob
4:00  Appalachian Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers
4:45  Galax String Band: The New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters

Evening Concert

5:30-6:00  Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey and Carl Rutherford
6:00-9:00  NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia

Heritage Stage

11:00  Narrative: History of Appalachian Music and Radio
11:45  Strings: Bruce Greene, Don Pedi, Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon
12:30  West Virginia Liar's Contest with Bonnie Collins and Bill Lepp
1:30  African-American Traditions: Joe Thompson
2:15  West Virginia Liar's Contest with Bill Lepp
3:15  Galax String Band: The New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters
4:00  The Community Dance at Carcassonne
4:45  Bluegrass Gospel: Still Waters

Bristol Mural Stage

11:00  West Virginia Guitar: Carl Rutherford
12:00  Mountain Banjo: Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby
1:00  Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey
2:00  North Carolina Strings: Don Pedi and Bruce Greene
3:00  North Carolina Fiddle: Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon
4:00  Mountain Fiddle: Clyde Davenport and Michael DeFosche
5:00  Songs and Ballads: Laura Boosinger and Randy Wilson

Appalachian Kitchen—“Breads and Spreads”

11:00  Apple Butter: Linda Childress
12:00  Biscuits: Lacey Griffey
12:45  Foraged Wild Jam: Susan Bridges
1:30  Cherokee Bean Bread: Marie Junaluska
2:15  Jams: Kim Carroll
3:15  Foraged Wild Jelly: Susan Bridges
4:00  Dumplings: Lacey Griffey
4:45  Cornbread: Fred McClellan

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Bamako Stage

11:00  Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music
11:45  N'gousson: Bambara Balafon from Bélédougou
12:30  Tartit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance
1:15  Neba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou
2:00  Members of the Ensemble Instrumental
2:45  Tabital Pulak: Fulani Pastoral Music
3:30  N'gousson: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougou
4:15  Tartit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance
5:00  Neba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou

Timbuktu Stage

11:00  So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets
11:45  Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People
12:30  Dogon Masked Dance Group
1:15  Fashion Show
2:00  Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers
2:45  Musical Storytellers
3:30  So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets
4:15  Donso N'goni: Hunters' Music
5:00  Dogon Masked Dance Group

Evening Concert

6:00-9:00  Malian Music: Kanaga de Mopti, Malian National Band, and Ali Farka Touré, "Africa's Bluesman"

Talking Stage—Wedding Day

11:00  Donso N'goni: Hunters' Music
11:45  Musical Storytellers
12:30  Malian Clothing for Weddings
1:15  Planning a Wedding
2:00  Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets & Marionettes

Photo by Darin A. Peiland © Smithsonian Institution
2:45 Growing Up in Mali
3:30 Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People

Malian Foodways

11:00 Tion tion: Kadiatou Sow
12:00 Salabuluna: Ami Sow
1:00 Tiakry (Degé): Kadja Souko
2:00 Fonio: Fatoumata Sissoko
3:00 Couscous (Kayes Region): Mariam Diarra
4:00 Niougu na: Mariama Camara
5:00 Tamarand Drink: Aissa Touré

Scotland at the Smithsonian

Fès Stage

11:00 Gaelic Concert: Music from Scotland's Highlands & Islands
11:45 Songs & Ballads of Music & Musicians
12:30 Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past
1:15 Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney
2:00 City of Washington Pipe Band in Concert
2:45 Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past
3:15 Alison Kinnaird & Christine Primrose: Music from Gaelic Scotland
4:15 Mitchelson Brothers: Scottish Highland Dance Demonstration & Workshop
4:45 The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance

Evening Concert Scotland since Robert Burns: New Voices/New Songs

Ceilidh Stage

11:00 Scottish Small Pipes
11:45 Mitchelson Brothers: Scottish Highland Dance Demonstration & Workshop
12:30 The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance
1:30 Brian McNeill: Songs of Scots, At Home & Abroad

2:00 A Burns Supper: Scotland's Annual Celebration of the Bard's Birthday
3:30 Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland
4:30 Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney

Panto Stage

11:00 Panto!: Cinderella & Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater
12:00 The Singing Kettle: Scottish Children's Songs
1:00 Songs & Ballads from North-East Scotland
1:45 Panto!: Cinderella & Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater
2:45 The Singing Kettle: Scottish Songs for Children

3:45 Glasgow in Song & Story
4:30 Panto!: Cinderella and Scotland's Traditional Holiday Theater

Narrative Stage

11:00 Life on Fair Isle: Britain's Most Remote Community
11:45 Scots: The Mither Tongue
12:15 The Art of Distilling Scotch Whisky

1:30 Western Isles Storytellers: Crofting in the Outer Hebrides
2:15 Scottish Stories of the Supernatural
3:00 North Sea Oil: Oil & Aberdeen

3:45 Celebrating Shetland's Viking Past: The Up Helly-A'

4:15 The Scottish Travellers
4:45 Scottish Tartans: Legend, Lore & Craft

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

Family Activity Tent

11:00 Scottish Songs from Aberdeen
11:45 Scottish Toys & Games
12:30 Appalachian Songs & Instrument Demonstration
1:15 Appalachian Songs
2:00 Scottish Toys & Games
2:45 Appalachian Stories
3:30 Malian Names & Greetings
4:15 Malian Puppets
5:00 Malian Music & Dance

Malian Cinema on the Mall

National Museum of Natural History

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts

Millennium Stage

Please see pages 118-19 for detailed schedule.

SUNDAY, JULY 6

APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

Harmony Stage

11:00  Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob

11:45  Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey and Carl Rutherford

12:30  Banjo Workshop: Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby

1:30  African-American Traditions: Joe Thompson

2:15  Galax String Band: The New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters

3:15  Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob

4:00  Appalachian Strings: Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby

4:45  African-American Traditions: Joe Thompson

Closing Concert

5:30-6:15  Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers

6:15-7:00  Bluegrass: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers

Heritage Stage

11:00  Dinner on the Grounds—Bluegrass Gospel: Still Waters

11:45  Dinner on the Grounds: The O'Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers

12:30  Dinner on the Grounds: Still Waters

1:30  Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey and Carl Rutherford

2:15  The Role of Religion in Appalachian Family Life

3:15  Life in the Coal Fields

4:00  North Carolina Strings: Bruce Greene and Don Pedi

4:45  West Virginia Liars: Bil Lepp and Bonnie Collins

Bristol Mural Stage

11:00  Fiddle: Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon

12:00  Appalachian Storytelling: Bonnie Collins

1:00  Mountain Fiddle: Clyde Davenport

2:00  North Carolina Strings: Don Pedi and Bruce Greene

3:00  Songs: Laura Boosinger

4:00  Mountain Fiddle: Clyde Davenport

5:00  Mountain Fiddle: Rayna Gellert and Joe Fallon

Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Bamako Stage

11:00  N'goussou: Bambara Balafon Music from Bélédougu

11:45  Tartit Tuerag Music and Sword Dance

12:30  Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou

1:15  Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music

2:00  Donso N'gomi: Hunters' Music

2:45  Yaya Coulibaly: Puppets & Marionettes

3:30  Tartit: Tuareg Music and Sword Dance

4:15  Néba Solo: Balafon Music from Kénédougou

5:00  Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music

Timbuktu Stage

11:00  Baba Larab: Takamba Music and Dance of the Sonrai People

11:45  Dogon Masked Dance Group

12:30  So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets

1:15  Fashion Show

2:00  Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulu Masked Dancers

2:45  Members of the Ensemble Instrumental

3:30  So Fing: Somono Music with Puppets

4:15  Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulu Masked Dancers

5:00  Dogon Masked Dance Group

5:30-7:00  Closing Concert: Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Talking Tree

11:00  Donso N'gomi: Hunters' Music

11:45  Growing Up in Mali

12:30  Mali at the Smithsonian

1:15  What Makes a Woman Beautiful?

2:00  Musical Storytellers

2:45  Malian Festivals

3:30  Malians in the United States

4:15  Malian Buildings

5:00  Members of the Ensemble Instrumental

Malian Foodways

11:00  Beef Feet and Malo Ngom: Kouda Kanté

12:00  Tiagadégé na: Khadiatou Sow

1:00  Hagakory: Alima Touré

2:00  Aca (bean fritters) and Spicy Sauce: Kadja Soucko

3:00  Almanga Magfè: Fatoumata Sissoko

4:00  Tò: Mariam Diarra

5:00  Labadia: Ami Sow

---

indicates American Sign Language interpreted program
Scotland at the Smithsonian

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event-spacing</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Highland Dance Demonstration and Workshop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:30</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance Band</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:30</td>
<td>Gaelic Music Traditions from Scotland's Highlands &amp; Islands</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Brian McNeill &amp; Friends: New Songs of the Scottish Diaspora</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:15</td>
<td>Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:00</td>
<td>Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>Closing Concert Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7:00-8:00</td>
<td>Festival Finale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Participants from all three programs will join together on one stage for a final performance.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ceilidh Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event-spacing</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>The Singing Kettle: Scottish Music for Children</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Dougie MacLean: A Contemporary Voice of Scotland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Mitchelson Brothers: Highland Dance Workshop &amp; Demonstration</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Alison Kinnaird &amp; Christine Primrose: Gaelic Harp &amp; Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:00</td>
<td>Scottish Bagpipes, Great &amp; Small</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Scottish Women Sing Songs of Scottish Men (and Vice-Versa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:30</td>
<td>Wrigley Sisters: Music from Orkney</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Narrative Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event-spacing</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Dovecot: Scottish Tapestry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:30</td>
<td>Western Isle Storytellers: The Outer Hebrides &amp; the Sea</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:15</td>
<td>How to Dress Scottish</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:00</td>
<td>North Sea Oil: Life on the Off-Shore Rigs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:45</td>
<td>Castles and Kirks: Scotland's Built Heritage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:30</td>
<td>Scottish Heraldry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:45</td>
<td>The Art of Distilling Scotch Whisky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Scottish Storytelling: Stories of Travellers &amp; Traveling</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scottish Kitchen

Demonstrations of Scottish cooking and baking will take place throughout the day.

FAMILY ACTIVITY TENT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event-spacing</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11:00</td>
<td>Scottish Toys &amp; Games</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:45</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs &amp; Instrument Demonstration</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:15</td>
<td>Appalachian Storytelling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:00</td>
<td>Appalachian Songs &amp; Instrument Demonstration</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:45</td>
<td>Scottish Musical Instruments</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3:30</td>
<td>Malian Names &amp; Greetings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:15</td>
<td>Malian Puppets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5:00</td>
<td>Malian Music &amp; Dance</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MALIAN CINEMA ON THE MALL

National Museum of Natural History

Please see page 120 for detailed schedule of the Mali Film Festival.

---

The original Carter Family, Maybelle on guitar, cousin Sara, and Sara's first husband, A.P. Carter. Photo courtesy the Birthplace of Country Music Alliance
Evening Programs

Wednesday, June 25

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-6:15</td>
<td>Old-Time String Band: The New Southern Ramblers (with Ralph Blizard) with The Green Grass Cloggers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:15-7:00</td>
<td>Bluegrass: The East Tennessee State Student Bluegrass Band</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali’s Timbuktu Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6:30-9:00</td>
<td>Mali Celebration: Néba Solo and Ensemble Instrumental</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scotland’s Ceilidh Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Dance Workshop &amp; Ceilidh</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Millennium Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-6:00</td>
<td>Dance Workshop led by Maria Leask</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00-7:00</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance from Edinburgh with host Fiona Ritchie</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Saturday, June 28

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:15-6:00</td>
<td>Mali Dance Party: Dogon Masked Dance with special guests the Mitchelson Brothers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00-7:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: John Dee Holeman, Nat Reese, Jake and Dara Krack, Lester and Linda McCumbers, Kim Johnson, Dwight Diller, Ginny Hawker and Tracy Schwartz</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali’s Timbuktu Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6:00-9:00</td>
<td>Malian Music: Ensemble Instrumental, National Traditional Ensemble and Oumou Sangaré, “The Queen of Wassoulou”</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scotland’s Fèis Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>Celebration of the Scottish Fiddle with host Fiona Ritchie</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Sunday, June 29

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-6:00</td>
<td>Beautiful Beyond: Christian Songs in Native Languages</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Millennium Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-6:00</td>
<td>Dance Party with the Carcassonne Community Dance Group; Groupe Sogonikun: Wassoulou Masked Dancers; Tabital Pulaku: Fulani Pastoral Music</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:00-7:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: Jean Ritchie, Clyde Davenport, Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby, the Carcassonne Community Dance Group, and Scottish ballad singers Stanley Robertson, Ed Miller, and Karine Polwart</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Wednesday, July 2

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-8:00</td>
<td>The Occasionals: Scottish Ceilidh Dance with special guests the Mitchelson Brothers</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Millennium Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-6:15</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Thursday, July 3

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:15-6:00</td>
<td>Dance Party with the Carcassonne Community Dance Group from Kentucky and the Lee Sexton Band</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mali’s Timbuktu Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6:00-9:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: John Dee Holeman, Nat Reese, Jake and Dara Krack, Lester and Linda McCumbers, Kim Johnson, Dwight Diller, Ginny Hawker and Tracy Schwartz</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Friday, July 4

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-6:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: Wayne Henderson, John Cephas and Ralph Blizard, John Dee Holeman, Wayne Henderson, John Cephas and Phil Wiggins</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scotland’s Fèis Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-6:00</td>
<td>Contemporary Appalachian Music: Appalachian Reggae with Ras Alan and Brother Bob</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:15-7:00</td>
<td>Dance Party with the Carcassonne Community Dance Group from Kentucky and the Lee Sexton Band</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Sunday, June 29

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: John Dee Holeman, Nat Reese, Jake and Dara Krack, Lester and Linda McCumbers, Kim Johnson, Dwight Diller, Ginny Hawker and Tracy Schwartz</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Monday, June 30

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Millennium Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6:00-7:00</td>
<td>Voices of Māori Women</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Tuesday, July 1

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6:00-7:00</td>
<td>Brian McNeill and Friends: New Songs of Scotland</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Wednesday, July 2

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-8:00</td>
<td>Ralph Rinzler Memorial Concert: An Evening of Songs by the Carter Family</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Millennium Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: Jean Ritchie, Clyde Davenport, Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby, the Carcassonne Community Dance Group, and Scottish ballad singers Stanley Robertson, Ed Miller, and Karine Polwart</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Scotland’s Fèis Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: Jean Ritchie, Clyde Davenport, Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby, the Carcassonne Community Dance Group, and Scottish ballad singers Stanley Robertson, Ed Miller, and Karine Polwart</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Friday, July 4

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: Jean Ritchie, Clyde Davenport, Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby, the Carcassonne Community Dance Group, and Scottish ballad singers Stanley Robertson, Ed Miller, and Karine Polwart</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Millennium Stage

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5:30-7:00</td>
<td>NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: Jean Ritchie, Clyde Davenport, Will Keys and Lee Sexton with Doug Dorschug and Rich Kirby, the Carcassonne Community Dance Group, and Scottish ballad singers Stanley Robertson, Ed Miller, and Karine Polwart</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Saturday, July 5

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage
5:30–6:00  Songs from the Coal Fields: Elaine Purkey and Carl Rutherford
6:00–9:00  NEA Presents National Heritage Fellows from Appalachia: Ralph Stanley, Still Waters, Hazel Dickens, Jesse McReynolds, the O’Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers

Mali’s Timbuktu Stage

6:00–9:00  Malian Music: Kanaga de Mopti, Malian National Band, and Ali Farka Touré, “Africa’s Bluesman”

Scotland’s Fèis Stage

5:30–7:00  Scotland since Robert Burns: New Voices/New Songs

John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Millennium Stage

6:00–7:00  The Battlefield Band

Sunday, July 6

Appalachia’s Harmony Stage

5:30–6:15  Closing Concert: Bluegrass—The O’Quinn Brothers and the Bluegrass Travelers
6:15–7:00  Galax String Band: The New Ballard’s Branch Bogtrotters

Mali’s Timbuktu Stage

5:30–7:00  Closing Concert: Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

Mali’s Timbuktu Stage

6:00–8:00  Festival Finale

Beautiful Beyond: Christian Songs in Native Languages

A central part of the mission of the National Museum of the American Indian (NMAI) is the preservation, perpetuation, and awareness of Native languages. Language preservation has become an urgent matter in Native communities, especially where the number of elders who grew up with their own language is rapidly diminishing. In some of these communities, the singing of Christian hymns is one of the few ways in which the language is still heard on a regular basis.

Several years ago NMAI began a project to document the singing of Christian songs in Native languages. To date, more than twenty-five groups in fifteen communities have been recorded, including Mohawk, Cherokee, Navajo, Kiowa, Comanche, Yup’ik, and Hawaiian. In some communities the hymns are translations from English-language hymnals, sung in three- or four-part harmony, while in others the songs are “made” by Native singers and sung in unison. Besides singing in church, the singing groups are in demand for community events, especially funerals and wakes. An anthology will be released around the time of the opening of NMAI’s new museum on the National Mall (September 2004).

The June 29 evening concert brings together five groups—Navajo, Cherokee (from the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma and the Eastern Band of North Carolina), Oneida (New York), and Lakota. Their presence at this Festival represents a strong force in Indian communities throughout the continent and demonstrates that among the many tools of cultural survival the power of language is one of the most important.

Howard Bass
Public Programs Producer
National Museum of the American Indian

Maisie Shenandoah, Joanne Shenandoah, and Liz Robert.
Photo © Silver Wave Records, courtesy the Shenandoah family
Malian Cinema on the Mall

Mali has one of the most vibrant and dynamic cinematic traditions on the African continent. This special film series will include feature, documentary, and animation films. The film festival is co-sponsored by the National Museum of Natural History with funding from the U.S. Department of State. All screenings start at 1:00 p.m. and take place in the Baird Auditorium of the National Museum of Natural History.

June 26

Guimba the Tyrant (Guimba, un tyran, une époque), 1995, Cheick Oumar Sissoko. 93 minutes, 35 mm, color. In Bambara and Peul with English subtitles.

June 27

June 29

The Pact of Bamako (Bamako Sigi-Kan), 2002, Manthia Diawara. 76 minutes, DVD, color. In Bambara, French, and English. Manthia Diawara will attend and discuss the film.

July 2

Living Memory (Passe vivant), 2003, Susan Vogel. 53 minutes. BETA SP, color. In Bambara and French with English subtitles.

Susan Vogel (Writer/Director), Samuel Sidibé (Producer/Writer), and Salif Keita will attend and discuss the film.

Mischiefous Child (L’enfant terrible), 1993, Kadiatou Konaté. 12 minutes, BETA SP, color. In French with English subtitles.

July 3

Faraw, Mother of the Dunes (Faraw, mère des sables), 1997, Abdoulaye Ascofare. 90 minutes, 35 mm, color. In Sonrai with English subtitles.

July 4

Genesis (La Genèse), 1999, Cheick Oumar Sissoko. 102 minutes, 35 mm, color. In Bambara with English subtitles.

July 5

Skirt Power (Taafe Fanga), 1997, Adama Drabo. 95 minutes, 35 mm, color. In Kaado and Bambara with English subtitles.

July 6

Brightness (Yeelen), 1987, Souleymane Cissé. 105 minutes, 35 mm, color. In Bambara with English subtitles.

Of Related Interest

June 20–September 12

Celebrating Scottish Crafts
Arts & Industries Building

This exhibition from the National Museums of Scotland features more than 100 contemporary objects produced by traditional methods and highlights the specialized skills and crafts passed down from one generation to the next. Many of the artisans featured in the exhibition have been invited to participate in the Festival.

June 24–September 3

Ancient Manuscripts from the Desert Libraries of Timbuktu
Library of Congress, Thomas Jefferson Building, Great Hall Gallery South

On display are 23 ancient manuscripts from the Mamma Haidara Commemorative Library and the Library of Cheick Zyni Baye of Boujemaha.

Twin sisters dressed up for a Malian festival, as seen in the African Voices exhibition at the Natural Museum of Natural History. Photo © Mary Jo Arnoldi

African Voices
National Museum of Natural History (Permanent exhibition)

This exhibition examines the diversity, dynamism, and global influence of Africa's peoples and cultures over time in the realms of family, work, community, and the natural environment. Mali is featured in the contexts of archaeology, cultural heritage, and preservation; textiles; children's toys and games; and more.

Images of Power and Identity
National Museum of African Art (Permanent exhibition)

This exhibition introduces the visual arts of Africa south of the Sahara. Objects on display from Mali include Dogon and Bambara sculptures and masks, Fulani gold earrings, and archaeological treasures from the inland Niger Delta.

To view works of art from Mali, both on view and in the museum's collections, visit www.nmfa.si.edu/pubaccess/pages/maliart.asp

The site also provides links to additional resources on Mali at the National Museum of African Art, the Warren M. Robbins Library, and the Eliot Elisofon Photographic Archives.
Festival Participants

Appalachia:
Heritage and Harmony

AFRICAN-AMERICAN TRADITIONS

John Dee Holeman, guitar, Durham, North Carolina
Melvin Alston, guitar, Durham, North Carolina
Holeman is a master bluesman and buck dancer. In 1988 he was awarded a National Heritage Fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts. He was also the winner of a North Carolina Folk Heritage Award in 1994. He is accompanied by Melvin Alston.

Nat Reese, guitar, Princeton, West Virginia
Reese grew up in the coal fields of West Virginia and began to perform blues and string band music in the coal fields in the 1930s. He is the 1995 winner of the Vandalia Award, West Virginia's highest folklife honor.

James "Sparky" Rucker, guitar, Maryville, Tennessee
Rhonda Rucker, harmonica, Maryville, Tennessee
The Ruckers are performers and scholars of traditional African-American music. Sparky is a folklorist, historian, musician, storyteller, and author. His performances include music and stories from the history of African-American traditions. Playing banjo, guitar, and spoons, he is accompanied by his wife.

Joe Thompson, fiddle, Mebane, North Carolina
Bob Carlin, banjo, Lexington, North Carolina
The senior band of the East Tennessee State University

Laura Boosinger, banjo, Asheville, North Carolina
Boosinger began playing Appalachian music at Warren Wilson College in 1978. In the years since she has been studying the music of traditional folk artists and performs on a variety of instruments. <www.lauraboosinger.com>

Ginny Hawker, vocals, Cox Mill, West Virginia
Tracy Schwartz, fiddle and guitar, Cox Mill, West Virginia
Hawker grew up singing with her father in southern Virginia, and as a youngster she was influenced by the compelling unaccompanied singing of the Primitive Baptist Church. She and her husband Tracy Schwartz sing powerful songs from the mountains. Schwartz is a long-time member of the New Lost City Ramblers.

Bobby McMillon, Lenoir, North Carolina
McMillon was awarded a North Carolina Folk Heritage Award in 2000. He is a fine ballad singer and storyteller and has appeared previously at the Smithsonian Folklife Festival.

Randy Wilson, banjo, Big Creek, Kentucky
Wilson is an all-purpose musician, storyteller, dance caller, and children's entertainer from Clay County, Kentucky.

BLUEGRASS

The East Tennessee State University
Student Bluegrass Band
Raymond McLain, fiddle, Johnson City, Tennessee
Daniel Boner, guitar, Bridgeton, New Jersey
Josh Georgia, mandolin, Marshall, North Carolina
Jenny Lyn Harper, bass, Simsboro, Louisiana
J.P. Mathes, banjo, Elizabeth, Tennessee

The senior band of the East Tennessee State University Bluegrass and Country Music Program is made up of some of the outstanding players in the program. Recent graduates of the program include country superstar Kenny Chesney and Blue Highway leader Tim Stafford.

The O'Quinn Brothers
& the Bluegrass Travelers
Fred O'Quinn, banjo, Birchleaf, Virginia
Joe Arrington, bass, Haysi, Virginia
Herb Bowman, fiddle, North Tazewell, Virginia
Keith O'Quinn, mandolin, Bee, Virginia
Kyle O'Quinn, guitar, Birchleaf, Virginia

There are hundreds of regional bands who play local events and the festival circuit during the summer. Among these, the O'Quinns are a family group from Birchleaf, Virginia, a stone's throw from the home of the Stanley Brothers. They play regionally in southwest Virginia and Kentucky. Family patriarch Fred O'Quinn plays both old-time and bluegrass music on his banjo.

CONTEMPORARY APPALACHIAN MUSIC

The Celtibillies
Jack Hinselwood, fiddle and guitar, Shaeusville, Virginia
Bucky Barlow, hammered dulcimer, keyboard, and bodhran, Christiansburg, Virginia
Jeff Hofmann, bass, Roanoke, Virginia
Tim Sauls, banjo, bouzouki, and guitar, Roanoke, Virginia

The southwest Virginia-based Celtibillies began in 1994 as a contra dance band but gradually started to incorporate sounds from the British Isles into their music, combining it with traditional Appalachian fare. <www.celtibillies.com>

Appalachian Reggae Musician
RAS ALAN w/Brother Bob

Ras Alan Childress, guitar and kickbox, Zionville, North Carolina
Brother Bob Franklin, bass, Weaverville, North Carolina
This duo performs reggae music with lyrics frequently dealing with life in the region. They add a new, contemporary twist to Appalachian music.

GOOSE TRADITIONS

Dorothy "Fountain" Myles, vocals, Appalachia, Virginia
Pastor Stanley D. Almon, keyboard, Lynch, Kentucky

Myles, a native of Cumberland, Kentucky, now lives in Appalachia, Virginia. Myles writes her own religious songs as well as mining-oriented songs. She is accompanied by Pastor Almon.

Still Waters
Chris Hall, upright bass, Leburn, Kentucky
Bennie Moore, mandolin, Langley, Kentucky
Dexter Mullins, rhythm guitar, Pine Top, Kentucky
Delmas Slone, lead guitar, Pine Top, Kentucky

Still Waters of Hindman, Kentucky, is a quintet of fine traditional gospel singers. The group sings at churches and community events as part of their music ministry.
INSTRUMENTAL TRADITIONS

Clyde Davenport, fiddle, Jamestown, Tennessee
Michael DeFosche, guitar, Whiteville, Tennessee
Octogenarian Davenport continues to play many of the older fiddle tunes of the area and is one of the best of the regional fiddlers. He is accompanied by Michael DeFosche.

Dwight Diller, banjo, Hillshom, West Virginia
Diller has been called "the Guardian of Traditional West Virginia Mountain Music." He has spent his life learning from his West Virginia neighbors and in turn teaching many others the music. He is an accomplished banjo player.

Rayna Gellert, fiddle, Asheville, North Carolina
Pedi is from Madison County, North Carolina. A master dulcimer player and teacher, he has won many dulcimer championships at fiddle contests.

Bruce Greene, fiddle, Burnsville, North Carolina
In the 1970s and 1980s, Greene immersed himself in learning from Kentucky fiddlers. He has since developed his own style. Currently living in North Carolina, Greene has taught the fiddle for many years.

Wayne Henderson, guitar
Mouth of Wilson, Virginia
Henderson is a well-known southwestern Virginia guitarist and guitar maker. His guitars are highly sought after; there is a waiting list of many years. One of the finest guitarists in the United States, he was awarded a National Heritage Fellowship in 1993 from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Will Keys, banjo, Gray, Tennessee
Dwight Diller has been called "the Guardian of Traditional West Virginia Mountain Music." He has spent his life learning from his West Virginia neighbors and in turn teaching many others the music. He is an accomplished banjo player.

Jesse Morris, bass, Elk Creek, Virginia
A 1996 winner of a National Heritage Fellowship, Keys is one of the best old-time banjo players in the country and has toured as a member of the Masters of the Banjo tour. He is accompanied by Doug Dorschug.

Lester McCumbers, guitar, Nicut, West Virginia
Lee Sexton is one of Eastern Kentucky's musical treasures. A fine banjo player, he has played old-time music all of his life. He is the winner of the Kentucky Governor's Award for Lifetime Achievement in the Arts.

Asbury Laury, Buckingham, Virginia
Laury began to write songs while involved in the Pittston Coal Strike in 1989–90. She began to perform at festivals in the 1990s and impressed all those who heard her, including the great labor songwriter Hazel Dickens.

Carl Rutheiford, guitar, Caretta, Virginia
Rutherford worked the mines as a youth until bad health forced him to find another line of work. He is a composer of strong mining songs including "Tops Off Our Pretty Mountains" and also a fine guitar player in the style of country music pioneers Dick Justice and Frank Hutchison.

OLD-TIME MUSIC STRING BAND

The New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters

Dennis Hall, guitar, Galax, Virginia
Eddie Bond, fiddle, Fries, Virginia
Dallas Hall, mandolin, Galax, Virginia
Jesse Morris, bass, Elk Creek, Virginia
Wayne Watson, banjo, Galax, Virginia

Out of the great tradition of old-time string bands from the area around Galax, Virginia, the New Ballard's Branch Bogtrotters are one of the hottest bands in the area. They won the Old-Time band competition at the 1999 and 2000 Galax Old Fiddler's Convention. Their name comes from the original Bogtrotters, the famous Galax-area band of the 1930s.
The New Southern Ramblers
(with Ralph Blizard)

Ralph Blizard, fiddle, Blountville, Tennessee
John Herrmann, bass, Asheville, North Carolina
Gordy Hinners, banjo, Weaverville, North Carolina
Phil Jamison, guitar, Asheville, North Carolina
John Lilly, mandolin, Charleston, West Virginia

One of the great Southern string bands today is Ralph Blizard and the New Southern Ramblers. Blizard (b. 1918), from Blountville, Tennessee, is an acknowledged master and one of the great fiddlers playing in the longbow style. He received a National Heritage Fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts in 2002.

STORYTELLING

Lloyd Arneach, Asheville, North Carolina

Arneach is a member of the Eastern Band of the Cherokee Tribe. His tales include old stories of the Cherokee and contemporary tales from other Indian tribes.

Bonnie Collins, Fairmont, West Virginia

Collins, from Doddridge County, West Virginia, is one of the state's most beloved storytellers. Recognized for her humor, Collins has been involved and acted as a judge in the state's liar's contest. She was awarded the 1991 Vandalia Award, West Virginia's top folklife award.

Orville Hicks, Boone, North Carolina

A member of the well-known Hicks storytelling family, Orville Hicks is one of the fine tellers of "Jack Tales" and carries on the tradition of such great storytellers as Ray and Stanley Hicks.

Bil Lepp, South Charleston, West Virginia

Lepp is a side-splittingly funny man. He was the winner of the West Virginia liar's contest so often that he was made the emcee. Hear Bil's stories of his adventures with his pal, Buck Dog. <www.buck-dog.com>

Frank Proffitt, Jr., Todd, North Carolina

Proffitt is a member of the storytelling Hicks family and is known for his "Jack Tales." His father Frank Proffitt was also a well-known mountain musician and the person from whom the song "Tom Dooley" was first collected.

DANCE

Carcassonne Community Dancers

Jon Henriksen, Blackey, Kentucky
James Boggs, Big Laurel, Kentucky
Rachel Boggs, Big Laurel, Kentucky
Loretta Henriksen, Blackey, Kentucky
Beverley Johnson, Amsterdam, New York
Dale Johnson, Amsterdam, New York
Ray Stone, fiddle, guitar, Hindman, Kentucky
Bobbie J Whitaker, Comonoma, Kentucky
Charles Whitaker, Comonoma, Kentucky
Charlie Whitaker, Blackey, Kentucky, caller
Joyce Whitaker, Blackey, Kentucky

From Blackey, Kentucky, this group includes members of the Carcassonne Community Dance, one of the nation's oldest community square dances. It occurs twice a month in Letcher County, Kentucky, at the old schoolhouse in Carcassonne, and residents still gather to dance a traditional form of square dancing they have preserved since settlement days.

The Green Grass Cloggers

Phil Jamison, Asheville, North Carolina
Karen Bartlett, Asheville, North Carolina
Wanda Davidson, Swannanoa, North Carolina
Gordy Hinners, Weaverville, North Carolina
Carol Mallett, Asheville, North Carolina
Hunt Mallett, Asheville, North Carolina
Trina Royar, Asheville, North Carolina
Rodney Sutton, Marshall, North Carolina

The Green Grass Cloggers were formed in 1971 by North Carolina college students. Based in Asheville, North Carolina, they are known for their high-stepping clogging style.

FOODWAYS TRADITIONS

Susan Bridges, Meadows of Dan, Virginia

Bridges learned from older family and friends which greens and other natural sources of food to pick, mix, and eat. She has practiced natural foraging and has begun developing a business around dried and canned food products, such as wild strawberry jam and blue violet jelly.

Kim Carroll, ClintoWood, Virginia

Carroll is a food product entrepreneur who cans and sells vegetables such as pickled beans, corn, and mixed pickles. Her grandmother's recipe that she uses for mixed pickles is said to be one of the best in the country.

Linda Childress, Clintwood, Virginia

Childress is a food product entrepreneur who is developing dry mixes for biscuits and varieties of gravy. She is also known for making anything out of apples, including pies, dumplings, and apple butter.

Harvey Christie, Romney, West Virginia

Christie is a chef and owner/operator of Gourmet Central, a business that markets fine jams and jellies. <www.chefharv.com>

Lacey Giffrey, Benham, Kentucky

Giffrey prepares a big Sunday dinner that includes fried chicken, cabbage, greens, fruit cobblers, and pies. She is part of the African-American coal mining community of the Benham-Lynch area of Kentucky.

Gerald Hawkins, Knoxville, Tennessee

Hawkins prepares Mexican-style dishes, inspired by his Mexican-American son-in-law. He specializes in salsa that he cans and sells. He will be assisted by Greg Golden, chef and manager of Clinch-Powell Community Kitchens.

Marie Junaluska, Cherokee, North Carolina

Junaluska is a member of the Eastern Band of the Cherokee Tribe who specializes in traditional cooking of that community: chicken, greens (cabbage, mustard, and turnip), breads (lye dumplings, bean and corn bread), and potatoes (fried, boiled, and stewed).

Bennie Massey, Lynch, Kentucky

A retired coal miner from the Benham-Lynch-Cumberland region of Kentucky, Massey is well known in his community as an expert barbeque chef.

Fred McClellan, Abingdon, Virginia

McClellan was a tobacco farmer-turned-shiitake mushroom-grower for chefs around Abingdon restaurants. He also has 20 years of food service background operating his Hillbilly Food Store business, specializing in mountain staples such as chicken, catfish, taters, breakfast biscuits, potato salad, beans, and hotdog chili.
Donso N’goni
Sékouba Traoré, Koulikoro, singer and donso n’goni
Dhâmance Traoré, Koulikoro, donso n’goni
Nianankoro Diaara, Koulikoro, guiros
Sékouba Traoré is generally recognized as the greatest interpreter of hunters’ music. Hunters play a fundamental role in Mandé society; they are frequently the ones who found communities, defining the character of the society and serving as guardians of tradition and peace. Their songs serve to galvanize hunters by recounting their exploits and exhorting them to accomplish even greater feats. The donso n’goni is a seven-string harp reserved for hunters’ music.

Ensemble Instrumental
Massambou Wèlé Diallo, artistic director
Souadou Soumano, singer
Sananjing Kouyaté, singer
Nafissatou Maiga, singer
Djènèba Doumbia, singer
Adama Soumone Sacko, singer
Babily Kanoueté, kora
Manadou Kouyaté, kora
Binefou Kéita, n’goni
Modibo Diabaté, balafon
Mohamed Toukana, djembé

The National Instrumental Ensemble members are national representatives of traditional griot music. Most of the singers are women, jelimusaw, who sing legends and praise-singing in arranged pieces adapted from traditional choral music.

Groupe So Fing, Markala
Mariam Thiero, singer/dancer
Aïchatou Nione, backup singer
Almamy Thiero, percussionist
Oumar Traoré, percussionist
Yaya Fatimata, percussionist
Mohamed Khalifà Thiero, percussionist

Puppets are a communicating link between water spirits and the fishing Somono and Boso peoples. These puppets are grouped into four categories: those used during the day, those used at night, those from the water, and those from the earth.
Mariam Thiero sings with a strong,
clear voice accompanied by drummers.
The large water animal puppets, hippos, manatees, and large river fish, are manipulated to their rhythms.
N’Goussoun, Koulikoro
Mariam Bagayoko, singer/dancer
Djéneba Bagayoko, chorus singer
Dognan Coulibaly, balafon
Alou Diarra, balafon
At the age of 67 and barely 4 foot 6 inches tall, Mariam Bagayoko may be one of Mali’s most dynamic dancers. She can proudly claim to be the only woman to actually dance the balafon. N’goussoun is court music, generally praise-singing and encouragement.

Néba Solo Group, Sikasso
Souleymane Toure (Néba Solo), balafon
Yacouba Toure, kérégné
Siaka Toure, balafon
Oumar Coulibaly, percussion
Zantien Gonsogo, percussion
Mahamadou Toure, percussion
Becary Dembélé, dancer
Ibrahim Toure, dancer
Néba Solo is an international celebrity. His group consists of balafons, hand drum, kérégné (a metal scraper), and inexhaustible dancers. Néba Solo is also an accomplished woodworker and makes his own balafons.

Oumou Sangaré, Wassoulou
Oumou Sangaré, lead vocals
Sapa Konyaté, singer/dancer
Zoumana Teréta, sokou (traditional violin)
Abdoulaye Fofana, flute
Nabintou Diakité, singer/dancer
Mouneissa Tandina, drummer
Salah Boba, guitar
Hamane Touré, bass
Ousmane Haidara, manager
Brehima Diabaté, camale n’goni
Cheikh Oumar Diabaté, djembe
Alama Diakité, yabar (percussion)
Oumou Sangaré is the leading female star of the Wassoulou sound, which is based on an ancient tradition of hunting rituals mixed with songs about devotion, praise, and harvest played with pentatonic (five-note) melodies. In addition to the flute and violin, she is accompanied by scraping kérégné, and women playing flé, a calabash strung with cowrie shells, which they spin and throw into the air in time to the music. Sangaré most often sings about love and the importance of freedom of choice in marriage.

Salif Keita, Bamako
Salif Keita, lead vocals/guitar
Djély Moussa Konyaté, electric guitar
Harouna Sané, camale n’goni
Drissa Bagayoko, djembe
Mamadou Koné, calabash
Adama Konyaté, tama
Souleymane Doumbia, African congas
Souleyman Konyaté, n’goni
Abdoulaye Diakité, keyboards
Aminata Doumbia, background vocals
Assitan Diarra, background vocals
Jean-Marie Arisse, technical crew
Isabel Bousalet, technical crew
Timor Cardenas, technical crew
Johnson Mensah, technical crew
David Lunardelli, technical crew
One of the most celebrated Malian singers, Salif Keita was a lead musician with the Rail Band and the Ambassadeurs du Motel in the ‘60s and ‘70s. Then he went on to international superstardom with his own band. He plays solo guitar and sings as well as performing with his group. <www.salifiqueita.net>

Tabitou Pulaku, Mopti
Boureima Dicko, flute
Dinda Sarré, n’goni
Gabdo Cissé, dancer
Goro Hamadoun, calabash
Aminata Coulibaly, dancer
Hamadoun Biga Cissé, drum
Yéhia Dicko, violin
Alina Barry, dancer
Aminata Salmama Traore, singer
The essential instrument of the nomadic herder Fulani is the flute, evoking nostalgia for and harmonious existence in the rural areas. The dances are restrained and graceful, and the dancers’ feet barely leave the ground, as if they were constrained by the undergrowth.

Tartit, Kel Antessar
Mohamed Al Ansari, leader
Issa Amanou, n’goni
Mohamed I. Ag Ousman, n’goni
Ishad Ag Mohamed, n’goni
Fatoumata Mohamadoun, dancer
Tafé W/Allousseini, violin
Aboubacrine Ag Mohamed, singer
Abdallah Al Housseni, guitar
Tartit, meaning “union,” was originally formed as a group of Tuareg women living in Mauritanian refugee camps during the Tuareg rebellion in the 1990s. Their music is performed seated, with a languorous grace expressed in gestures of the arms and eyes. The men in the group also dance with swords.

PUPPETRY
Yaya Coubaly, puppeteer, Bamako
Yaya Coubaly is a graduate of the National Art School of Mali where he studied sculpture and performance. He also studied string marionettes in France. Coubaly has combined Malian traditional puppet masquerades with Western string marionettes to create a new contemporary form drawing inspiration from traditional theater. www.theatredelamarionnette.com

CRAFT TRADITIONS
Carding
Fatoumata Maiga, Ségou
Fatoumata Maiga, who cards wool and cotton, is a member of a Association Yelen, in Ségou, which makes tapestries.

Spinning
Aminata Keita, Ségou
Aminata Keita, a member of the Association Gatex, spins threads in Ségou for narrow and wide looms.

Cotton Weaving
Ousmane Sarré, Badalabougou
Ousmane Sarré is best known for his blankets and pagens (women’s wrap-skirts) and head bands worn by godmothers at weddings.

Wool Weaving
Kola Kassé, Mopti
Kola Kassé is a master weaver who now resides in Bamako. He makes blankets and tunics woven from sheep’s wool. He is also trained in cotton weaving. He is particularly known for his multi-colored blankets given to newly married women.

Bogolan/Mudcloth
Nakounté Diarra, Kolokani
Nakounté Diarra is one of the masters in the art of making bogolan, a cotton fabric dyed with mud. She uses old motifs learned from her mother and grandmother alongside new ones that she invents. Her cloths are worn as women’s wrap-around skirts and used for clothing for traditional hunters and healers. Her artistry is featured in the National Museum of Natural History exhibition African Voices. This famous artist trained Founemoussoko Sakiliba.
Bathily, one of the largest tie-dyers in Mali. The process makes the fabric beating it flat, works for his uncle, Issa Sanounou Bathily, who irons fabric by her mother. Aminata Sakho learned tie-dyeing from the west African region, and people from outside Mali come to Bamako to study with her. The Association is known for its scarves, pictures, tablecloths, and pillowcases.

Indigo-Dyeing

Ousmane Gamane, Bandiagara

Ousmane Gamane is a Dogon tailor who specializes in the use of indigo dye to create deep blue cotton fabrics. These are made into clothing, such as shirts and pants, hats, bags, boubous, and dresses. Dogon people also wear solid blue scarves when they are in mourning. These are made into clothing, such as shirts and pants, hats, bags, boubous, and dresses. Dogon people also wear solid blue scarves when they are in mourning. These are made into clothing, such as shirts and pants, hats, bags, boubous, and dresses. Dogon people also wear solid blue scarves when they are in mourning.

Modern Tie-Dyeing

Tantou Sambaké, Bamako

Tantou Sambaké grew up in a family of dyers. She studied industrial chemistry at the School of Industry, Commerce, and Administration. Now she trains women at her school in tie-dye and business, environmental protection, safety, safe disposal of dye materials, and literacy. Men learn to sew the designs into the fabric and undo the sewing after the dyeing process. Her company, Tantou Teintures, now exports textiles.

Aminata Sakho, Bamako

Aminata Sakho learned tie-dyeing from her mother. She belongs to Amiart Association and exports fabrics throughout West Africa.

Fabric Finishing

Sanounou Bathily, Bamako

Sanounou Bathily, who iron fabric by beating it flat, works for his uncle, Issa Bathily, one of the largest tie-dyers in Mali. The process makes the fabric shiny, smooth, and more attractive.

Hand Embroidery

Ousmane Traoré, Djenné

Ousmane Traoré is a hand-embroiderer from Djenné. His city and Timbuktu are known for their fine embroidery, and he is from a long line of famous embroiderers. His is a fast-disappearing skill, however. It takes from three to nine months to embroider a garment; young people become discouraged, and prefer to learn to embroider by machine.

Machine Embroidery

Sekou Touré, Bamako

Sekou Touré is a machine embroiderer and tailor from the Mopti region. He makes women's and men's clothes, then embroiders them in complementary colors.

Fashion Design

Didou Diarrah, Dou Cœur, Bamako

Sambaké Fané, Bamako

Both designers have organized traditional and contemporary fashion shows.

Kasobane Design Group, Bamako

Kansouna Coulibaly

Klétioum Bembélé

They have done extensive research in bogolan designs and their meaning. Kasobane is also well known for creating historical costumes for Malian films and clothing for Malian musical groups.

Style Movement Consultants Models

Stephanie Alexander, Toya Brown, Terraria Chase, Maria Demard, Tanisha Dodson, Alysssa Gannum, Torrey Hurt, Viola Isola-Hola, Eson Jones, Sean Majors, Darlena Perry, Darleta Perry, Angela Tilghman, Latonya Tilghman, Nila Zachman

Malian Association Models

Tuareg Jewelry

Allasane Ag Agaly, Gao

Allasane Ag Agaly makes Tuareg jewelry with silver, bronze, ebony, stones, and leather. He makes teapots, sabers, and knives and won the UNESCO First Prize at SIAO 2000 in Ouagadougou, the regional craft exhibition, for one of his exquisitely decorated silver teapots.

Traditional Jewelry

Amadou Saye Sembou, Mopti

Amadou Sembou, from a family of well-known jewelers, makes traditional jewelry forms in gold and silver. He produced jewelry for the French company Hermès. He makes the famous large Fulani gold earrings.

Modern Jewelry

Hady Koné, Bamako

Hady Koné makes gold and silver jewelry with modern designs. He comes from a family of jewelers in Ségou.

Mamadou Gyaye Thiam, Kayes

Mamadou Gyaye Thiam is known for his gold and silver rings, pendants, and earrings.

Blacksmithing

Kassim Ballo, Bamako

Kassim Ballo learned the secrets of iron and fire from his father. He makes hoes, digging sticks, and other agricultural implements from iron and wood. Originally from Yiringasso, he now works in Bamako. He sells his tools to the surrounding agricultural region and makes new tools adapted to the more arid soils of today. He also makes cooking utensils, buckets, bowls, and stoves from recycled metals.

Mohamed Ag Iknane, Gao

Mohamed Ag Iknane is a Tuareg blacksmith from Gao. He makes knives, richly decorated sabers, picture frames, key chains, bottle openers, jewelry boxes in leather and wood, and camel saddles.

Blacksmithing

Kassim Ballo, Bamako

Kassim Ballo learned the secrets of iron and fire from his father. He makes hoes, digging sticks, and other agricultural implements from iron and wood. Originally from Yiringasso, he now works in Bamako. He sells his tools to the surrounding agricultural region and makes new tools adapted to the more arid soils of today. He also makes cooking utensils, buckets, bowls, and stoves from recycled metals.

Mohamed Ag Iknane, Gao

Mohamed Ag Iknane is a Tuareg blacksmith from Gao. He makes knives, richly decorated sabers, picture frames, key chains, bottle openers, jewelry boxes in leather and wood, and camel saddles.
Pottery

Kadidia Nienta, Mopti

Kadidia learned pottery from her grandmother and mother. She makes hand-built pottery such as large pots for decoration, tea cups, ornaments, as well as non-traditional subjects like telephones, cell phones, and soccer balls.

Straw Jewelry

Almadane Traoré, Timbuktu

Almadane Traoré makes straw jewelry (bracelets, necklaces) that imitates traditional gold designs for customers who cannot afford real gold. She also makes dolls and fans.

Fatoumata Gariko, Hombori, Mopti region

Fatoumata Gariko makes handbags, placemats, and hats, from straw. Depending on the customer's needs, she dyes the straw to make multi-hued designs. She is a member of the Women's Association of Hombori, which focuses on children's education, health and reproductive awareness, and the transmission of traditional knowledge to the younger generation.

Mat-Weaving

Halimatou Abouba, Gao

Halimatou Abouba weaves the straw mats she uses to assemble a Sonrai house.

Leather Work

Tago Walet Memé, Timbuktu

Tago Walet Memé is a Tuareg leatherworker who learned this tradition from her family. She creates cushions, leather mats, key chains, and bags, painted with the distinctive designs of Timbuktu.

Modern Leather Work

Fadiala Dembelé, Bamako

Fadiala Dembelé, originally from Kita, works at the Craft Center in Bamako. Chosen by fellow leather makers to represent them at the Festival, he makes handbags, wallets, and briefcases, decorated with Malian textiles such as bogolan.

Shoemaking

Tahirou Soumounou, Bamako

Tahirou Soumounou is originally from Djithoubé in the Sikasso region where he learned the secrets of leather and skins from his family. After additional training in France, now as a master craftsman he makes men's and women's shoes in both leather and cloth.

Wood Sculpture

Mody Cissoko, Bamako

A master sculptor, he was selected by his fellow artists to represent their craft in Washington. He is known for his masks carved in ebony and teak and his chess and checker sets. He trains other sculptors from West Africa.

ARTS OF ADORNMENT

Hairdressing

Kadidia Ouologuem, Bamako

Kadidia Ouologuem makes incense, underskirts, and braids hair.

Soumata Sidi, Gao

Soumata Sidi is a hairdresser who also makes beads for hair and for necklaces. The different hairstyles she creates reflect the social status of her clients: young women, newlyweds, new mother of a boy or girl, mother of twins, or grandmother.

Henna Artistry

Aminata Doumbia, Bamako

Aminata Doumbia is a henna artist. The designs, usually applied to women's hands and feet at the time of marriages and baptisms, have now become fashionable anytime, even for young urban women.

Shea Butter Extraction

Kourooutomo Ouattara, Sikasso

Kourooutomo Ouattara lives in the Kénédougou area where the karité (shea) trees are plentiful. During the dry season she processes the locally gathered shea tree nuts into the butter used for cooking or cosmetic products.

TRADITIONAL MEDICINE

Toumani Diakité, Bamako

Toumani Diakité is a traditional healer. Having learned the secrets of plants from his father, he has become President of the Association of Traditional Therapy.

FOODWAYS TRADITIONS

Ami Sow

Khadiatou Sou Theoré

Halimatou Touré

Kadia Souko

Fatoumata Sissoko Cissé

Kourba Kanté

Mariam Diarra

Aissa Touré Almanafi

Mainouma Coulibaly Camara

Grains such as rice, millet, fonio, and wheat and tubers such as cassava and sweet potatoes form the starch base, accompanied by a seasoned sauce, of many Malian meals. The Niger and Bani rivers provide an abundance of fish which are used fresh, smoked, dried, and salted in Malian dishes. Mali raises cattle, sheep, and goats for local consumption and regional export. Nomadic people's diets are rich in dairy products, particularly butter and milk.

ARCHITECTURE TRADITIONS

Baba Cissé, architect

Boubacar Mady Diallo, architect

Allassane Hassaye, master mason

Boubacar Koumassane, master mason

Manmahane dit Berre Younou, master mason

Almoudou Baigna, master mason

Alhoussein Ag Tadjoutine, Tuareg tent

Seko Tientao, mason

Mandedeou Tantao, mason

Manoudou Kontao, mason

Oumar Younou, mason

Agaly Ousmane, mason

Baba Touré, mason

Ahamadou Hassaye, mason

Adoulahi Albaidja, mason

Malian architectural styles presented at the Festival include mud brick/adobe architecture used in city gates, homes, and mosques; stone architecture used in Dogon toguna or meeting houses; and nomadic structures used by Turaeg, Sonrai, Somono, and Fulani peoples.
Scotland at the Smithsonian

MUSIC

The Battlefield Band, Central Belt

Mike Katz, Highland pipes/small pipes/whistle/guitar
Pat Kilbride, vocals/guitar
Alan Reid, co-founder, vocals/keyboard
Alistair White, fiddle/whistles/bagpipes

Over the past three decades, Battlefield Band has played a central role in the Scottish folk music revival. Although undergoing several changes in personnel, Battlefield continues to write and record important, innovative material. The band's extensive touring schedule makes it one of the best-known Scottish traditional bands in America. <www.battlefieldband.co.uk>

Margaret Bennett, Skye/Edinburgh

A noted folklorist and scholar as well as an exceptional Gaelic and Scots singer and storyteller, Bennett is an Honorary Research Fellow at University of Glasgow and appears at the Festival as both a performer and a presenter. <www.margaretbennett.co.uk>

City of Washington Pipe Band, Washington, D.C.

A local band, City of Washington is an internationally respected and award-winning “Grade 1” band in the highly competitive world of Scottish piping. <wwwserve.com/cowebp>

Phil Cunningham, Portobello/Inverness

Co-founder of the seminal 1970s band Silly Wizard and the 1980s supergroup Relativity, Cunningham is a giftedaccordionist and respected composer as well as a central figure in the world of Scottish traditional music. <www.philcunningham.com>

Johnny Cunningham, Portobello/Massachusetts

An extraordinary fiddler, composer, and entertainer, Cunningham was a co-founder of Silly Wizard, a member of such noted groups as Relativity and Night Noise, and a mainstay of numerous Masters of Celtic Fiddle tours in the United States. Now based in New England, he tours extensively and is a regular headliner at international festivals and concert series.

Fiddlers' Bid, Shetland Islands

Christopher Stout, fiddle
Andrew Gifford, fiddle
Maurice Henderson, fiddle
Kevin Henderson, fiddle
Catriona McKay, clarsach, harp, piano, vocals
Johnathon Ritch, bass
Steve Yarrington, guitar

Fiddlers’ Bid is a young, fiddle-based band dedicated to both old and new Shetland traditional music. The Folklife Festival is their introduction to American audiences. In addition to their considerable artistry, they are enthusiastic and knowledgeable representatives of Shetlandic culture. <www.fiddlersbid.co.uk>

Alsdaire Fraser, fiddle, clackmannon, California
Nathalie Haas, cello

One of Scotland’s finest fiddlers and performers, Fraser is revered by Celtic music lovers on both sides of the Atlantic. Many Americans are familiar with his playing from movie soundtracks (The Last of the Mohicans, Titanic), performances at the Kennedy Center and Lincoln Center, and his acclaimed band Skyclad. Now based in California, he directs the 100-member San Francisco Fiddlers orchestra and his Valley of the Moon fiddle school, which has spread interest in Scottish fiddle styles throughout North America. He is joined by Natalie Haas on cello. <www.alasdairfraser.com>

The Fochabers Fiddlers, Fochabers, Morayshire

James Alexander, director
Members: Colin Black, Patricia Bonnar, Liam Bouret-Nyfeles, Carol Brown, Kerry Cattanach, Fiona Christie, Rachel Christie, Carol Deeney, Louise Duncan, Lindsey Eccleston, Fiona Evans, Alexandra Gordon Smith, Amanda Hall, Mony Hall, Georgina Innes, Hannah Jackson, Karen Laing, Sott McBay, Ross McDonald, Kirsty McMeeken, Mairi McLenan, Duncan Menzies, Edvord Mills, David Milne, Kathryn Milne, Laura Milne, Jenny Mitchell, Heather Munns, Eilidh Patterson, Lynette Reid, Philip Scarfe, Anna Smith, Jill Thomson, Ruth Thomson, Katrina Wallen, Sarah Watson, Claire Watt, Laura Watt

This young people's fiddle orchestra from Fochabers in northern Scotland has several recordings and international tours to its credit. Led by James Alexander, the group reflects the importance placed on traditional arts and arts instruction in Scottish communities. <www.celtscot.ed.ac.uk/fiddle/fochabersfiddlers.htm>

Scot Gardiner, Forfar

Gardiner grew up near Forfar in eastern Scotland. He is an enthusiastic singer of North-East bothy (agricultural) ballads, many of which he learned from Tam and Anne Reid of Cullerlie, Aberdeenshire.

William “Billy” Jackson
Glasgow/North Carolina

A preeminent Scottish harper and founding member of the legendary band Ossian, Jackson is also well known as a composer, arranger, teacher, and performer. His song “Land of Light” won the Glasgow Herald’s 1999 “Song for Scotland” competition. <www.harald.pipex.com/ancient.harp.htm>

Alison Kinnaid, Edinburgh / Temple
Christine Primrose, Isle of Lewis

One of Scotland’s foremost exponents of clarsach (harp) music, scholar of harp history, singer, and renowned glass artist, Kinnaid was awarded the M.B.E. in 1997 for services to music and art. Christine Primrose, with whom she often performs and records, is an outstanding Gaelic singer from the Isle of Lewis who teaches traditional song at the Gaelic College in Skye. Both performers have won top honors at the National Mòd and the Pan-Celtic Festival in Killarney. <www.templerecords.co.uk>

Ishbel MacAskill, Inverness

A leading interpreter and teacher of Gaelic song, story, and culture, MacAskill was recently featured on the Scottish Women’s Tour and 2003 Celtic Connections Concert series. <freespace.virgin.net/ishbel.macaskill>

Iain MacDonald, Glenugie/Benbecula

A superb piper from a family of amazing pipers, MacDonald is also an excellent composer. A former member of Ossian and Battlefield Band, he is currently on the staff of the Gaelic College Sabhal Mor Ostaig on the Isle of Skye.

Adam McNaughtan, Glasgow

He is a songwriter, editor of Vol. 5 of the Greg-Duncan Collection of Folk-Songs of the North-East, bookseller, singer, Honorary Research Fellow at the University of Glasgow in Scottish studies, former teacher, and authority on the City of Glasgow. His songs are frequently recorded by other performers, and many have become Scottish classics.

Brian McNeill, Folkirk/Glasgow

An eminent songwriter, singer, fiddler, and multi-instrumentalist, he recently was appointed Head of Scottish Music at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music & Drama and is a mainstay of the Celtic Connections concert series. Co-founder of Battlefield Band and Clan Alba, he has been a leading figure in the Scottish folk music scene for more than three decades. <www.brianmcneill.co.uk>

Ed Miller, Edinburgh/Austin, Texas

A singer, folklorist, and teacher, he is well known to American audiences as a performer at festivals, clubs, Highland Games, and Burns Suppers. He also hosts “Folkways” on KUT-FM Austin, leads folk-song-based tours to Scotland, and teaches at folk music camps throughout the United States. <www.songsofscotland.com>
Jennifer Wrigley, fiddle from the The Wrigley Sisters, Edinburgh
An excellent piper, Fin is also assisting his father, Hamish Moore (see below), in demonstrating the making of Highland and Scottish bellows-blown pipes.

Karine Polwart, Edinburgh
This important young singer and songwriter is already a veteran of several major groups, including Battlefield Band, and is currently performing with Malinky. <www.malinky.com>

Anne Reid, Cullerlie, Aberdeenshire
With her late husband Tam Reid ("King of the Bothy Ballad"), Anne transformed their traditional farm into a small agricultural museum. For many years, the Reids' ceilidhs and festivals have been a mainstay of the Aberdeenshire cultural scene. An excellent singer in her own right, she is also an excellent cook and demonstrates her skills in both areas during the Festival.

The Singing Kettle, Kingskettle, Fife
Cilla Fisher, vocals
Kevin McClynd, vocals
Gary Coupland, accordion, keyboards, trombone
Artie Tizzie, vocals, guitar
This group is famed throughout the U.K. for its lively presentation of children's songs via concerts, CDs, videos, and frequent media appearances. Smithsonian Folkways Recordings has just released The Singing Kettle: Singalong Songs from Scotland in conjunction with the Festival. <www.singingkettle.com>

Sheena Wellington, Dundee
An excellent performer and eloquent expert on Scottish music and culture, Wellington was selected to perform Burns's "A Man's a Man for A'That" at the opening of Scottish Studies, and a host of BBC Radio Scottish supergroup Clan Alba. He is an expert on Scottish music and culture, frequent media appearances. Smithsonian Folkways Recordings has just released The Singing Kettle: Singalong Songs from Scotland in conjunction with the Festival. <www.singingkettle.com>

Sheila McCutcheon, caller/dancer
Grant Sinclair, dancer
This pair is in high demand throughout the world as performers and teachers of traditional Scottish dance.

DANCE
The Occasional, Edinburgh
Freeland Barbour, accordion
Ian Hardie, fiddle
Kevin MacLeod, banjo/mandolin
Gus Millar, drums
Robert Whitehead, accordion
Sheila McCutcheon, caller/dancer
Grant Sinclair, dancer
A leading Edinburgh ceilidh group headed by accordion virtuoso Freeland Barbour, The Occasional have been active since 1986 and frequently play at large festivals and dances throughout Scotland. <mysite.freerace.com/locharsonals>

Maria Leask, Lerwick, Shetland Islands
A dedicated dancer and dance historian, Leask has been active in teaching and documenting Shetland dance traditions for the Shetland Arts Trust throughout Scotland and Europe.

Deryck and Gareth Mitchelson, Angus
Renowned exponents of Scottish dance, the Mitchelson brothers specialize in Highland and step dance and are in great demand throughout the world as performers and teachers of traditional Scottish dance.

STORYTELLING, NARRATIVE, ORAL HISTORY
Stanley Robertson, Aberdeen
Master storyteller Robertson grew up in a traditional Traveller's household and is a nephew of the legendary ballad singer Jeannie Robertson. His family is an internationally renowned repository of Traveller's lore, Scottish song, balladry, stories, and folklore from Aberdeenshire and North-East Scotland. He was recently appointed as a community researcher at the Elphinstone Institute, University of Aberdeen.

Lawrence Tulloch, Yell, Shetland Islands
Born in 1942 in Yell, Shetland, Tulloch grew up listening to stories told by his father, the renowned storyteller Tom Tulloch, and other community members. He has participated in numerous storytelling festivals and is one of Shetland's foremost storytellers.

Western Isles Storytelling Group, Outer Hebrides
For several years, Chrisella Ross of the Gaelic Arts Agency in Stornoway, Lewis, has worked with local storytellers in the Gaelic community to develop narratives based on their lives and experiences as crofters, fishermen, and island residents. She is joined by Christina MacLean and Iain MacAuley.

POETRY/LANGUAGE
Sheena Blackhall, Aberdeen
A Creative Writing Fellow at the University of Aberdeen's Elphinstone Institute, Blackhall is a prominent Doric poet, storyteller, and singer, and is active in workshops and school programs. Her Scots-language Web site, The Kist, documents and encourages the writing and speaking of Doric—a distinct version of Scots spoken in North-East Scotland. <www.abdn.ac.uk/elphinstone/kist>

Bill Innes, Glasgow
A native of the Outer Hebrides, Innes is a passionate advocate of Gaelic poetry, language, and culture. His presentations and translations have been internationally acclaimed; his book, Chi Mi, won a National Mòd literature prize.

Billy Kay, Ayshire/Fife
Kay is a noted writer, documentary producer, broadcaster, and authority on Scots and Scottish culture. His accomplishments include the BBC/Odyssey series; the book Scots: The Mither Tongue; and numerous plays, short stories, poems, dramatizations, and awards. <www.sol.co.uk/b/bilky/bilky.htm>

Lesbhair Mor na Gaidhlig/The Big Book of Gaelic
An innovative arts project, The Big Book of Gaelic marries Gaelic poetry from Ireland and Scotland with the art of contemporary Irish and Scottish artists to create a modern answer to the Book of Kells. For the Festival, Proiseact Nan Ealan/The Gaelic Arts Agency in Stornoway, Lewis, has reproduced a series of panels containing information about the project and some of the remarkable artwork that it has inspired. <www.gaelic-arts.com>

GAMES
Lexie and Ross Dunn, Glasgow
Children's game experts Lexie and Ross Dunn from Big Top in Glasgow teach workshops on Scottish traditional games to children and teachers in school districts throughout Scotland.

PANTOMIME
Alan McHugh, Glasgow
In addition to a successful acting career (Sunset Song; Taggart), Alan McHugh writes, directs, and stars in the annual panto at the Adam Smith Theatre, Kirkcaldy. He is joined by RSAMD students William Barlow, Joanna Horton, and Lee O'Driscoll for workshops on the Scottish version of this uniquely British form of holiday entertainment.
CRAFT TRADITIONS

Bagpipes

Hamish Moore, Dunkeld, Perthshire

Moore is an esteemed maker of Highland, Scottish small pipes, and border pipes. As a maker and performer, he has been the key figure in the revival of the bellows-blown pipes of Scotland as well as the rediscovery of older regional and pre-military Highland piping traditions. He is joined by his son and apprentice Fin, also an excellent piper.

<BW>www.hamishmoore.musicscotland.com</BW>

Basket-Making

Ewen Balfour, Bae, Mainland, Shetland

Balfour learned to make "kishie" baskets (a backpack-type basket) from Lowrie Coupland, the last traditional basket maker in Shetland. In addition to being a dedicated artisan, Balfour is also a crofter and a former Gutier Jarl at the famous Viking-inspired Up-Helly-A' Festival held in the Shetlands each winter.

<HB>www.fairisle.org.uk/ianbestboatbuilder</HB>

Clarsach/Scottish Harp

Yule Harps/Jack Yule, Midlothian/Colorado

Born into a family of plowmen and foresters in East Lothian, Yule served a formal apprenticeship as a boat builder at Cockenzie on the Firth of Forth before establishing himself as a joiner and cabinetmaker. He turned his skills to harp-making in the early 1980s, and his instruments are now played by leading performers of the Celtic harp throughout the world. He recently moved from Silverburn, Midlothian, to Colorado.

<HB>www.scottishhrs.com</HB>

Curling Stone Making

Kays of Scotland, Mauchline, Ayrshire

The only remaining curling firm in Scotland and the only one in the world to make curling stones from legendary Ailsa Craig granite, Kays is a small family-run firm that dates back to the 1870s. Master craftsmen Jimmy and Russell Wylie demonstrate the care and skill that go into transforming a boulder into a finished curling stone.

<HB>www.kaysofscotland.co.uk</HB>

Golf Club Making

Heritage Golf of St Andrews, St Andrews, Fife

Originally from Yorkshire, Heritage's Managing Director Barry Kerr served a formal apprenticeship to a fourth-generation Scottish club maker and has been making golf clubs for more than forty years. Heritage specializes in both historic (pre-1930s) and contemporary clubs, as well as historic, hand-sewn/hand-molded golf balls. Kerr is accompanied by one of Heritage Golf's master craftsmen, Angus McLean.

<HB>www.heritage-golf.co.uk</HB>

Kilt-Making

Keith Kilt School: Robert McBain & Martin Flynn, Keith, Morayshire

McBain, founder and the director of the internationally renowned Keith Kilt School, trained and served as a tailor in the British Army for 14 years. Realizing that there was a shortage of kilt makers, he established a kilt-making school in Keith as a local economic revitalization project. Since 1994, he has trained more than 75 kilt makers, who, in turn, have established the Keith Kilt Guild. He is joined by his apprentice Martin Flynn.

<HB>www.kiltschool.moray.org</HB>

Knitting

Ann Eunson, Shetland Islands

Eunson makes traditional Shetland "white" or "wedding ring" shawls fine enough to be pulled through the womb of a ring. She spins wool from her own sheep to create the yarn.

<HB>www.scottishsporrans.co.uk</HB>

May MacCormick, Sanquhar, Dumfries

MacCormick is one of the few craftspeople who still knit in the black-and-white Sanquhar style, using ancient, complex, and beautiful patterns that are rarely seen outside her remote rural area of Dumfries and Galloway in southwest Scotland.

Anne Sinclair, Fair Isle

A master knitter, she learned patterned knitting and other Fair Isle crafts from her mother. Four generations of her family currently are involved in indigenous craft production. She has lectured and published material on Fair Isle history, folklore, culture, and dialect. She is also an excellent singer.

<HB>www.fairisle.org.uk</HB>

Orkney Chair-Making

Jackie and Manlene Miller, Kirkwall, Orkney

There are no trees on Orkney—a key to understanding why this handsome, distinctive type of armchair unique to the islands north of the Scottish mainland is traditionally made of driftwood and braided sea grass ropes. Jackie learned to make these traditional chairs from his family and now makes them full-time at his shop, Scapa Crafts.

<HB>www.scapacrafts.co.uk</HB>

Silversmithing

Graham Stewart, Dumbline

Considered one of Scotland's leading silversmiths, Stewart is a second-generation silversmith. His work ranges from traditional spoons and quaichs (traditional Scottish bowls) to modern interpretations of such traditional objects as bowls and teapots. His work is often commissioned by and for museums and as presentation pieces. Recently, he was one of a small number of silversmiths commissioned to produce items for the Scottish First Minister's Bute House residence in Edinburgh.

Chair-Making

Marcus Eagleton, Murthly, Perthshire

Trained by his mother, Janet Eagleton, M.B.E., Marcus handcrafts sporrans in a small workshop in back of his family house. The grandson of a cobbler and great-grandson of a saddle maker, he makes both very traditional and very contemporary sporrans for customers who include celebrities as well as the King's Own Scottish Borderers, the Queens Pipers at Balmoral and Buckingham Palaces, and the Scots Guards.

<HB>www.scottishsporrans.co.uk</HB>
Jenny Phillips, heraldic artist

Established in 1912 by two of William Morris's master craftsmen, Dovecot has played a major role in 20th-century tapestry revival. Master weavers Douglas Grierson, with over 40 years' experience, and his former apprentice David Cochrane, with 15 years on the job, employ traditional, time-honored skills to produce tapestries based on contemporary designs—like a magnificent 18-square-meter “To a Celtic Spirit” they recently completed for Scottish artist Alan Davie. <www.dovecotstudios.co.uk>

Tartan

Lochcarron of Scotland, Galashiels, The Scottish Borders

Founded in the 1930s, Lochcarron is a family business owned by Alistair Buchan, the fourth of five generations of weavers. The company is a major producer of both tartan and cashmere for traditional markets as well as trendier firms, e.g., Vivienne Westwood and Comme des Garçons. Buchan is also the Chair of the Tartan Authority and extremely knowledgeable about the history of tartan and its traditions. Lochcarron employees Ritchie Douglas, Susie Douglas, Alwyn Johnson, and Katie Purdie demonstrate tartan designing, manufacturing, and finishing and explain the history and culture of the Borders region of southeast Scotland. <www.lochcarron.com>

SCOTTISH HISTORY/HERITAGE AREA

The Court of the Lord Lyon King of Arms, Edinburgh

Elizabeth Roads, Lyon Clerk & Keeper of the Records
Jenny Phillips, heraldic artist

Mrs. Elizabeth Roads, the Lyon Clerk, and the Court’s heraldic artist Jenny Phillips explain the Lyon Court, its history, current work, relationship to the Scottish justice system, and its ceremonial responsibilities. <www.heraldry-scotland.co.uk/Lyconcourt.htm>

Genealogical Tourism

Joanna Baird, Scottish Archives Network (SCAN): <www.scan.org.uk>
Stephen Chatterley, Scottish Register Office: <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>
Susan Corrigall, Scottish National Archives: <www.nas.gov.uk>

Jacqueline Hampson, VisitScotland/Ancestral-Scotland: <www.AncestralScotland.com>
Martin Tyson Scottish Register Office: <www.gro-scotland.gov.uk>

Staff from the VisitScotland/AncestralScotland.com, The National Archives of Scotland, The General Register Office for Scotland, and The Scottish Archive Network help Festival visitors use on-line resources to explore Scottish genealogy and history.

Gilding & Restoration, Edinburgh

Alan Simpson, conservator of heraldry, frames, and three-dimensional objects for Historic Scotland, demonstrates and explains the many crafts and skills needed for museum-quality restoration work and discusses his work at Historic Scotland’s historic properties throughout Scotland. <www.historic-scotland.gov.uk>

Stonemasonry/Stone Restoration, Culzean Castle, Ayrshire

Master stonemason Andrew Bradley heads the National Trust for Scotland’s Stonemasonry Apprenticeship Scheme at Culzean Castle in southwest Scotland. With the help of his apprentice Ross Davidson, he demonstrates the crafts of stone carving, masonry, and lime slaking and explains how they are used in the preservation and restoration of Scotland's built heritage. <www.nts.org.uk>

OCCUPATIONAL TRADITIONS

Off-Shore Oil Industry

Oral historians Hugo Manson and Terry Brotherstone of The Oil Lives Research Project at the University of Aberdeen join off-shore oil workers Bob Ballantyne, Alexia Green, and Dennis Krahn to talk about their lives and experiences on the North Sea oil rigs and the impact of the industry on the culture of North-East Scotland.

Whisky-Making

William Grant & Sons, Dufftown, Morayshire

Employees of Glenfiddich and Balvenie distilleries in the Speyside region of northern Scotland demonstrate and explain the art of making fine single malt Scottish whisky. Both distilleries are owned by the fifth generation of the founder, William Grant, and many of the workers come from multigenerational whisky-making families. Joining us from William Grant & Sons are maltsters Stevie Archibald and Robbie Gormley; cooper Ian McDonald and Donald Ramsay; coppersmith Dennis McBain; and distillery experts Jim Brown, Graham Coull, Peter Gordon, Kevin McKenzie, Ian Miller, Paul Ross, and Dougie Waugh. <http://www.grantusa.com>

FOODWAYS TRADITIONS

Principal cook: Sue Lawrence, Edinburgh

BBC Master Chef, cookery columnist for Scotland on Sunday and Scotland Magazine, and author of Scots Cooking, as well as numerous other cookbooks.

Principal cook: Janet MacRae, Loch Alsh

Chair of the Scottish Women's Rural Institute http://www.swri.org.uk

Participating cooks include: Margaret Bennett, Ann Eunson, Alexia Green, Alison Kinnaird, Iain MacAsley, Christina MacLean, Christine Primrose, Anne Reid, Chirsella Ross, Anne Sinclair, Sheena Wellington

BEAUTIFUL BEYOND: CHRISTIAN SONGS IN NATIVE LANGUAGES

Cherokee National Youth Choir, Tahlequah, Oklahoma

Jan Ballou, music director

Walter Buffalo Meat, Alice Christie, Amanda Gibe, Vanessa John, Leslie Ketcher, Lora Miller, Ashley Proctor, Megan Ross, Ryan Sienna, Chris Smith

The Welch Family, Eastern Band Cherokee, Robbinsville, North Carolina

Alfred Welch Sr., Hunter Welch, Maybelle Welch

TecenPos Gospel Melody

Cynthia Anderson, Alfred L. Jim, John Wilson

Oneida

Liz Robert, Joanne Shenandoah, Matie Shenandoah

Cheyenne River Mission Singers

Joseph Blue Coat, Norman Blue Coat, Steve Emery, Tom Stoher, Iva Traverse Smithsonian Support for the Festival

SMITHSONIAN FOLKLIFE FESTIVAL SPONSORS

The Festival is co-sponsored by the National Park Service. The Festival is supported by federally appropriated funds, Smithsonian trust funds, contributions from governments, businesses, foundations, and individuals, in-kind assistance, volunteers, and food, recording, and craft sales.

Major Festival In-kind Support

Major in-kind support for the Festival has been provided by media partners WAMU 88.5–FM American University Radio, The Washington Post, washingtonpost.com, and Afropop, and by Motorola, Nextel, Whole Foods Market, and Go-Ped.

General Festival In-Kind Contributions

For 37 years the Smithsonian Folklife Festival has been able to present the best traditional music from around the world without charge to the public. For 33 of those years, the Recording Industries Music Performance Trust Funds has been instrumental in making that possible. We are deeply grateful.

Our gratitude to all the volunteers who make the Festival possible.

APPALACHIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

This program is produced in collaboration with the Birthplace of Country Music Alliance and the Center for Appalachian Studies at East Tennessee State University.

Major contributions are provided by the Recording Industries Music Performance Trust Funds, the National Endowment for the Arts, King Pharmaceuticals, the Norfolk Southern Foundation, Tennessee Tourism, and West Virginia Division of Tourism. Additional support is provided by the Appalachian Regional Commission, the Virginia Foundation for Humanities, Eastman Chemical, and The United Company.

Friends of Appalachia

Special Thanks

Sam Adams, The Mountain Eagle; Bill Aldacusion; Peggy Bagget, Virginia Commission for Arts; Debra Basham, West Virginia Division of Culture and History; Howard Bass, National Museum of the American Indian; David Bearinger, Virginia Foundation for Humanities; Ed Benson, Country Music Association; Berea College; Barry Bergey, National Endowment for the Arts; Brent Bjorkman, Kentucky Folklife Program; Matt Bolas, Bristol Tennessee/Virginia Chamber of Commerce; Freddie Boyd, Bryant Label Co.; Jim Brackens, Sprint; Toby Bradley, Mayor, Jonesborough, Tennessee; Allen Brown, R.C.A-Nashville; Richard Burgess; Leslie Burrell; Guy and Candie Carawan, Highlander Center; Bob Carlin; Frank Carmack, Birthplace of Country Music Alliance; The Carter Family Fold; Janette Carter, Carter Family Memorial Music Center; Joe Carter; Ruby Caudill; Center for Interdisciplinary Studies at Virginia Tech University; Lois Clarke, United Companies; Lori Cogan, Target Marketing; Roby Cogwell, Tennessee Arts Commission; John Cohen; Joel Cordle; Jennifer Core, Tennessee Arts Commission; Judy Donaghy; Mary Doornbas, John C. Campbell Folk School; Howard Dorgan, Appalachian State University; Barbara Duncan, Museum of the Cherokee Indian; East Tennessee State University, Storytelling Department; Beulah Ferguson, First Tennessee Development District; Rita Forrester; Carlynne Foster, Tennessee Department of Tourism Development; Jerry Fouse; Sue Fulmer; Steve Galvan; Bob Gates, Kentucky Folklife Program; Agnes Gorham, Tennessee Department of Tourism Development; Peter Gott; Alan Govenar, Documentary Arts; Troy Gowen, East Tennessee State University; Judith Gray, American Folklife Center, Library of Congress; Rebecca Grindstaff, East Tennessee State University; Bill Hall; Leton Harding, Birthplace of Country Music Alliance; James Harman, Radford University; Amy Henderson; Jon Henrikson; Ed Hicks, West Virginia State Archives; George Holt, North Carolina Museum of Art; Meredith Hubel, Smithsonian Institution Horticulture Services Division; Dale Jett; Richard Jett; Loyal Jones, Berea College; Rosa Lee Jude; Ajay Kalra, East Tennessee State University, Center for Appalachian Studies; Michael Keller; Brent Kennedy, University of Virginia at Wise; Kevin Lamb, peermusic Nashville; Land Air Transportation; Ray Lawson; Vicki Ledford, Qualla Arts and Crafts Mutual, Inc.; Laura Lee; Phil Leonard; Maya Lerman; John Lilly, Goldenseal Magazine; Jon Lohman, Virginia Folklife Program; John Loyd, Loyd Artists; Joe Macioni; Lou Mauri; Cheryl Marshall, WMMT FM/Appalshop; Wayne Martin, North Carolina Arts Council; Harriet Masters; Rita McClennen, Virginia Tourism Corporation; Glen McCollough, Tennessee Valley Authority; Tom McGowan, Appalachian State University; Raymond McLain, East Tennessee State University; Media General; Ceni Miles, National Museum of the American Indian; Gerry Milnes, Augusta Heritage Center; Paul Montgomery, Eastman Chemical Company; Claudia Moody, Northeast Tennessee Tourism Association; Charles Moore, East Tennessee State University; Rose Morgan, National Endowment for the Arts; Museum of the Cherokee Indian; Norma Myers, East Tennessee State University, Archives of Appalachia; Dr. Patrick Napier; Wade Nichols; Scott Niswonger; Niswonger Foundation; Scott Odell; Brenda Otterton; Jill Oxendine, East Tennessee State University; Leslie Paulin, R.C.A-Nashville; Gloria Pender; Nick Pender; Judy Petroski, Smithsonian Travel Services Office; Jennice W. Powers; Clay Prewitt, Target Marketing; Mary Jane Queen; Don Raines; Susan Reid, First Tennessee Development District; S. Clay Rogers; Michael Schewel, Secretary of Commerce & Trade, State of Virginia; Rob Schneider; Dan Sheehy, Jim Sledge, East Tennessee State University Photo Lab; David Smith; Jeanie Smith; Kirby Smith; Stephanie Smith; Bill Snodgrass; Beth Stockner, Bristol Tennessee/Virginia Chamber of Commerce; Lisa Suthpin; Leesa Sutton; Jeff Todd Titon, Brown University; Nicole Vachon; Virginia Tech, Center for Interdisciplinary Studies; Commissioner John Wade, Tennessee Department of Tourism Development; Tracy Walraven; WCYB TV; West Virginia Department of Cultural Heritage; Billy Edd Wheeler; Charlie Whitaker; Betsy White, William King Regional Arts Center; Chris Williams, National Council for the Traditional Arts; Joe Wilson, National Council for the Traditional Arts; WMMT radio; Mike Woodruff, East Tennessee State University; Hancel Woods, Birthplace of Country Music Alliance; Charlene Woyan-Palo; Harris Wray; Deborah Wyle, Norfolk Southern Foundation; Glen Yelton

Appalachian Regional Commission: John Cartwright, Molly Demarcellus, Tom Hunter, Dan Neff, Anne Pope, Jesse White

In-Kind Support

Atlantic Transportation Equipment
Fairfax County Public Schools, Office of Transportation Services
Lamar Advertising
Mali: From Timbuktu to Washington

This program is made possible by a partnership with the Government of Mali (Office of the President; Office of the Prime Minister; Malian National Folklore Festival Commission; Ministry of Tourism and Crafts; Ministry of Culture; Ministry of Women, Family, and Youth Affairs; and Ministry of Education), the World Bank, and the U.S. Agency for International Development. Additional supporting organizations include the U.S. Department of State, Africa Society, Corporate Council on Africa, Friends of Mali, Association of Malians, the Peace Corps, Chemonics Inc., and John Snow Inc.

Malin National Planning Commission
Dabene Diassane (Chair), Ilid, Demba Kone, Moussa Konaté, Fatim Kouyaté, Oumou Maiga, Gaoussou Mariko, Yribra Samaké, Mamadou Soubounou, Abdoulaye Sow, Germaine Samaké Sylla

National Advisory Board
Mossadeck Shada Bally, Alpha Baba Cissé, Ousmane Daou, Idrissa Diakité, Zakiyatou Halatine, Adam Ba Konaré (Co-chair), Doulaye Konaté, Fatim Kouyaté, Adama Samessekou, Bintou Sanankoua, Kléné Sanogo, Samuel Sidiibé (Co-chair), Bakary Soumanou, Ousmane Sow, Djibril Tabouré, Adam Thiam, Barthélemy Togo, Ibrahim Ag Yousouf

Special Thanks
Africare; Tavy Aherne; Aruna Amirthanayagam; Association of Malians of Washington; Bagna; John Bidwell; Marc Bonnenfant; Jean–Louis Bourgeois; Micah Boyer; Abby Bronson; California Newsreel; Baba Cissé; Julius Coles; Adama Coulibaly; Liesa Dana, Eliot Elisofon photographic Archives; John Woody; Robin Yeager; Moon Yun Choi

Rannenberger; Ambassador David Rawson; Heather Rostker, NMNH Exhibits; Deborah Rothberg, National Museum of Natural History; Victoria Rovine; Oumou Sangaré; Anna Schein; Greg Seelhorst; John H. Sime; Jeff Spivack; Heather Stapleton; Amar Sylla; Djibril Tabouré; Craig Tower; Aminatou Dramane Traoré; Susan Vogel; Pam White; Bruce Whitehouse; Paul Woods, Eliot Elisofon photographic Archives; John Woody; Robin Yeager; Moon Yun Choi

SCOTLAND AT THE SMITHSONIAN

This program is produced in partnership with the Scottish Executive, with the collaboration of the Scottish Arts Council, and a donation from VisitScotland. The leadership committee is chaired by the Rt. Hon. Jack McConnell, MSP.

Major contributions are provided by William Grant & Sons, and Highlands & Island Enterprise. Support is provided by the Shetland Islands Council, Shetland Enterprise, and the Shetland Arts Trust. Additional cooperative efforts come from the University of Aberdeen, the University of Edinburgh, Lochcarron Mills, the Gaelic Arts Agency, the Gaelic Promotional Trust, the General Register Office for Scotland, Historic Scotland, the National Archives of Scotland, and the National Trust for Scotland. Major in-kind support is provided by Landscapes Unlimited and Hurdzan and Fry.

Special Thanks
Jim Bargers and staff, Landscapes Unlimited; Maureen Barrie; Helen Bennett; Margaret Bennett; Graham Berry; Valentina Bold; Jenny Brown; Susan Brown; Alistair Buchan; Louise Butler; Celtic Connections & Staff; Lizette Corro; Ted Cowan; Robert Creighton; George Dalgleish; Duncan Dornan; Liane Dorsey; Alison Duncan; Arlaine Flynn; Sarah Frankland; Jeane Freeman; Davie Gardner; Moira Gibson; Michael Hance; Denise Hill; Hugh Hodgart; Meredith Hubel & Smithsonian Horticulture; Deborah Hunter; James Hunter; Michael Hurdan; Hurdan and Fry; Cathy Hurst; Bob Irvine; Gaelic Arts Agency & Staff; Peter Gordon; Iain Hamilton; Colin Hynd; Fiona & Mike Katz; Billy Kay; Own Kelly; Nod Knowles; Stuart MacDonald; Andrew MacKay; Margaret MacKay; George MacKenzie; Ian A. MacKenzie; Deidre MacMahon; Malcolm McLean; Joyce McMillan; Brian McNicoll & Jacqueline France; Adam McNaughton; Bob McWilliams; Ed Miller; Robin Morton; Helen Nicoll; National Museums of Scotland & Staff; Ged O’Brien; Caroline Paterson; Dougie Pimlico; John N. Randell; Alan & Mary Reid & Family; C. Duncan Rice; Gordon Rintoul; Fiona Ritchie; Elizabeth Roads & Office of Lord Lyon King of Arms; Ian & Norma Russell; Angela Saunders; Liz Sams; Shetland Arts Trust & Staff; Ian Smith; Mickey Stam; Elizabeth Stewart; Susan Stewart; Lorra Stoddart; John Wallace; Arthur Watt; David Weir; Sheena Wellington; Western Isles Council; Lord David Wilson of Tillyorn; Noel Young

Donors
Balmoral Group, Ltd.; Landscapes Unlimited; Ian Best; Brit Bit Limited; Hugh Cheapie; Nic Compton; Diamond Offshore Drilling, Inc.; Dopecot Studios; Harris Tweed Authority; Hugh Hodgart; Hurdan and Fry; KCA Deutag; Kays of Scotland; Lochcarron of Scotland; Maersk; Alan McHugh; Hamish Moore; National Galleries of Scotland; National Museums of Scotland; North Country Malt Supply; Orkney Library & Archives; Elizabeth Roads Office of Lord Lyon King of Arms; Rowan Companies, Incorporated; Scottish Curler; ScottishViewpoint; ScotWeave, Ltd.; Anne Sinclair; Mickey Stam; Graham and Elizabeth Stewart; William Grant & Sons

BEAUTIFUL BEYOND:
CHRISTIAN SONGS IN NATIVE LANGUAGES

Support for this program was provided in part by the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma.

Special Thanks
Daniel Ballou, Jan Ballou, Pam Bunker, Barbara Duncan, Steve Emery, Jamie Geneve, Alfred L. Jim, Euphemia John, Shirley Oswald, Joanne Shenandoah, Maybelle Welch, Chad Smith, Principal Chief, Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma

THE JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

For the first year, the Festival is collaborating with the Kennedy Center’s Millennium Stage to host free evening concerts featuring participants from Appalachia, Mali, and Scotland during the weeks of the Festival.

Special Thanks
Alissa Newman, Garth Ross, Julia Stemper, and the staff of the Kennedy Center’s Millennium Stage
SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Lawrence M. Small, Secretary
Sheila P. Burke, Under Secretary for American Museums and National Programs

CENTER FOR FOLKLIFE AND CULTURAL HERITAGE

Richard Kurin, Director
Richard Kennedy, Deputy Director
Loretta Cooper, Director of Development
Rebecca Smelting, Assistant to the Director/Special Events

ADMINISTRATION

Barbara Strickland, Director of Finance and Procurement
Helen O’Keefe, Contract Specialist
Lillian Philp-Brown, Fiscal Officer
Michael Page, Computer Specialist
Rachel Hardy, Administrative Assistant
Jennifer Pitt, Fiscal Assistant
Sheila Naylor, Office Manager
Mary Mikulla, Intern
Dale Dowdall, Ramona Dowdall, Enid Hairston, Renny Smith, Volunteers

SMITHSONIAN FOLKWAYS RECORDINGS

Daniel Sheehy, Director
Anthony Seeger, Director Emeritus
D.A. Sonneborn, Assistant Director
Betty Derbyshire, Financial Operations Manager
Richard Burgess, Marketing Manager
Pete Reiniger, Sound Production Supervisor
Margot Nassau, Folkways Licensing and Royalties
Mary Monseur, Production Coordinator
Judy Barlas, Manufacturing Coordinator
Sharleen Kavetski, Fulfillment Manager
Mark Gustafson, John Smith, Marketing Assistants
Kisha Anderson, Financial Assistant
Ronnie Simpkins, Norman van der Sluyts, Audio Recording Specialists
Lee Michael Demsey, Ryan Hill, Helen Lindsay, John Passmore, Fulfillment Staff
Angela Allen, Aaron Bittel, Jason Bryant, Elizabeth Celeste, Dannie Crespo, Katherine Delp, Bo Dierker, Ugur Kale, Farley Lord, Kanyikei Mukhtarova, Graham Savage, Brian Shimkovitz, Peter Smith, Elissa Staley, Alex Starr, Mayur Vyas, Bryan Wright, Interns

RALPH RINZLER ARCHIVES

Jeffrey Place, Archivist
Stephanie Smith, Assistant Archivist

SAVE OUR SOUNDS

Frank Proschans, Project Director
Michael Pahn, Archive Technician
Colleen Arnerich, Mike Atherton, Kim Coletta, Nate Lannan, Lyle Nagatomo, Interns

SMITHSONIAN GLOBAL SOUND

Jon Kertzer, Project Director
Toby Dodos, Technical Director
Susan Golden, Project Manager

CULTURAL HERITAGE POLICY

James Early, Director

CULTURAL RESEARCH AND EDUCATION

Olivia Cadaval, Chair

Thomas Vennum, Jr., Senior Ethnomusicologist Emeritus
Betty J. Belanus, Olivia Cadaval, Nancy Groce, Majorie Hunt, Diana Baird N’Diaye, Peter Seidel, Cynthia Vidaurri, Nilda Villalta, Curators, Folklorists, Education & Cultural Specialists

John W. Franklin, Program Manager
Heather Diamond, Anthony McCann, Emily Satterwhite, Jay Straker, Fellows
Priyanka Campanieri, Catherine Fitzgeard, Jenni Fuchs, Geraldine Johnson, Alison Lee Meyers, Ahd Özerden, Junhow Wei, Interns

Kurt Dewhurst (chair), Judy Mitoma (vice-chair), Anthony Gittens, Pat Jasper, Barbara Kirshenblatt-Gimblett, Enrique Lamadrif, J. Scott Raecker, Bernice Johnson Reagan, Gilbert Sprauwe, Jack Tchen, Ricardo Trinillo, Folklife Advisory Council

Michael Asch (chair), Phyllis Barney, Hal Cannon, Don DeVito, Ella Jenkins, Fred Silber, Daniel Sheehy, Folkways Advisory Board

Roland Freeman, Ivan Karp, Corinne Kratz, Worth Long, Rene Lopez, Kate Rinzler, Laura Schneider, Rajeev Sethi, Chucho Valdez, Research Associates

SMITHSONIAN FOLK LIFE FESTIVAL

Diana Parker, Festival Director
Stephen Kidd, Project Manager
Natalie Hisczak, Assistant to the Festival Director

PARTICIPANT SUPPORT

Yoanna Federici, Participant Coordinator
Micah Boyer, Darren Fisher, Assistant Participant Coordinators
Monica Glockner, Participant Intern
Sheila Washington, Housing Coordinator
Judy Lu-Watson, Social Coordinator
Jason Dooley, Transportation

TECHNICAL SUPPORT

Robert Schneider, Technical Director
Ariadne Pineda, Assistant Technical Director
Krista Robbins, Administrative Assistant
Anthony Milby, Timothy Rand, Carpenters

Andy Buckman, Frank Caulder, James David, Kendra Denny, David Essick, Kathleen McBride, Alicia McCauley, Charles Andrew Marcus, Terry Menefield, Thurston Reyes, Mariya Strauss, Alaric Strickland, Kelly Teichmiller, Erin Whitcomb, Exhibit Workers

Pete Reiniger, Sound Stage Coordinator
Steve Fisher, Sound Stage Supervisor
Jeanette Buck, Rachel Cross, Licia Gilinsky, Sissie Lang, Francesca McCrossen, Paul Douglas McNevic, Sarah Pilzer, Mary Sue Twohy, Sound Stage Managers

Saul Brody, David Clements, Paul Cogan, Dennis Cook, Marshall Crawford, Henry Cross, William Caldwell Grey, Alison Goessling, Jennifer Hitt, Greg Lampin, Dean Languell, Mike Monseur, Charlie Pilzer, Alyssa Rivers, Gregg Shanle, Claudia Telliho, Paul Watson, James Welsh, Engineers
CARLA BORDEN, Publications Manager/Chief Editor
MARY JO ARNDORF, Carla Borden, John Franklin, Nancy Groce, Jean Haskell, Jeff Place, Frank Proschak, Arlene Reiniger, Aboubakar Sanogo, Peter Seitel, Stephanie Smith, Writers/Editors
MICAH BOYER, Aboubakar Sanogo, Translators

DESERMON Design & Production
DENISE ARNOT, Art Director
JOAN ERDSKEN, Production Manager
KRYSTYN MACGREGOR CONFAIR, Design Assistant

DOCUMENTATION
CHARLIE WEBER, Video Documentation
COLLEEN ARNERICH, Katherine Dart, Diana Gibbs, Niamh Kelly, Nate Lannan, Heather Sperling, Documentation Interns

EDUCATION AND PROGRAM SUPPORT
ARLENE REINIGER, Program Specialist/Intern Coordinator
KATE KASHDAN, Family Area Intern
MONA BAGLA, Festival Web Intern
VICKI MOESER, Public Information
BECKY HABERACKER, Public Information Assistant
AMANDA SHAVALUK, Public Information Intern
CANDAS BARNES, Martin Hiraga, Jayne Magnuson-Tubergen, Kimberly Underwood, Hank Young, Sign-Language Interpreters
ERNIE HAIRSTON, Sign Master
PAUL JONES, Supply Coordinator
JENNIFER HUFFMAN, Supply Assistant
PETE FRIESEN, Supply Intern
BEVERLY SIMONS, Foodways Coordinator
JAMIE DAGGON, Foodways Intern
TASHA COLEMAN, Volunteer Coordinator
MERRILL FEATHER, Assistant Volunteer Coordinator
MIRIAM BELBLIDIA, Shanna Yarmovsky, Volunteer Interns
RACHEL DELGADO, Marketplace Coordinator
JOE WILLIAMS, Marketplace Operations Manager
ANNA PINKERT, Marketplace Intern
EDDIE MENDOZA, Concessions Manager
HENRI GOODSON, Nathan Midkiff, Consignment Coordinators
KELLY POSEY, Program Book Sales Coordinator

APPLAUCIA: HERITAGE AND HARMONY

JAN HASKELL AND JEFF PLACE, Curators

ARLENE REINIGER, Coordinator

JAN HASKELL, East Tennessee State University, Center for Appalachian Studies, co-chair, Research Curator

TED OLSON, East Tennessee State University, Center for Appalachian Studies, co-chair, Research Curator

CHARLIE CAMP, Dudley Connell, Phyllis Deel, Lee Michael Demsey, Katie Doman, Jean Haskell, Rich Kirby, Jon Lohman, Fred McClellan, Ted Olson, Barry Lee Pearson, Susan Spalding, Stephen Wade, Joe Wilson, Presenters

BROOKE LOMBARD, Program Intern

CHILDHOOD TASK FORCE

DAVID WINSHP, chair

ROBERTA HERRIN, East Tennessee State University

DANCE AND NARRATIVE TRADITIONS TASK FORCE

SUSAN SPALDING, Berea College, chair

KATY BROWN

ANGELYN DEBORD

BARBARA DUNCAN

MUSEUM OF THE CHEROKEE INDIAN

BETTY FINE, Virginia Tech University

PHIL JAMISON, Warren Wilson College

BOB LEONARD, Virginia Tech University

JOHN LILLY, Goldenseal Magazine

RICHARD ROSE, Barter Theater

SPARKY RUCKER

JIMMY NEIL SMITH, International Storytelling Foundation

JOSEPH SOBOL, East Tennessee State University

FOODWAYS TASK FORCE

PHYLLIS DEEL, Virginia Tech University, chair

JON LOHMAN, Virginia Folklife Program, chair

FRED MCCLELLAN, Birthplace of Country Music Alliance, chair

JEANNIE MULLINS, Virginia Tech University

MARK SOHN, Pikeville College

MATERIAL CULTURE TASK FORCE

ANNA FARIELLO, Virginia Tech University, Curatorial InSight, chair

KATHLEEN CURTIS WILSON, visiting scholar, University of Ulster, chair

SANDRA BENNETT, Thistle Cover Farm

DONNA ELEY

TIM GLOTZBACH, Dean, Kentucky School of Craft

GEORGE HILLER, Virginia Economic Development Partnership

JOHN HURON

ALLISON KAISER, Kentucky Guild of Artists and Craftsmen

TESS LLOYD, East Tennessee State University

DIAN MAGIE, Center for Craft, Creativity and Design

Rex McCarty

Jennie Mullins, Virginia Tech University

Kim Parker

RUTH SUMMERS, Southern Highland Craft Guild

Blair White, East Tennessee State University

MEDIA TASK FORCE

GREG WALLACE, Wallace Video, chair

BILL HARTLEY, Birthplace of Country Music Alliance

Rich Kirby, Appalshop

JAMIE ROSS, James Agee Appalachian Film Project

WAYNE WINKLER

STEPHEN WADE

MUSIC TASK FORCE

KATIE DOMAN, Tusculum College, chair

RICHARD BLAUSTEIN, East Tennessee State University

ED CABBELL

RON CARSON, Appalshop

Cecilia Conway, Appalachian State University

STEVE FISHER, Emory and Henry College

RITA FORRESTER, Carter Family Memorial Music Center

PAMELA FOSTER

CARY FRIDLEY

BRUCE HANEY

BILL HARTLEY, Birthplace of Country Music Alliance

EDDIE HUFFMAN

RICH KIRBY, Appalshop

JOHN LILLY, Goldenseal Magazine

RAYMOND McLAIN, East Tennessee State University

JERRY MIBLES, Augusta Heritage Center

TED OLSON, East Tennessee State University, Center for Appalachian Studies

JEFF PLACE, Smithsonian Center for Folklife and Cultural Heritage

CASSIE ROBINSON

SPARKY RUCKER

MIKE SEEGER

TIM STAFFORD

JACK TOTTLE, East Tennessee State University

TIM WHITE, Birthplace of Country Music Alliance
Tourism Task Force
Matt Bolas, Bristol Tennessee/Virginia
   Chamber of Commerce, co-chair
Geneva O’Quinn, Heart of Appalachia
   Tourism, co-chair
Kitty Barker, Blue Ridge Travel
   Association of Virginia
Judy Donaghy, North Carolina
   High Country Host
Steve Galyean, Ahsingdon Convention and Visitors Bureau
Amy McDougal, First Tennessee
   Development District
Leesa Sutton, North Carolina
   Division of Tourism

MALI: FROM TIMBUKTU TO WASHINGTON

Festival Planning Staff:
Banako
   Curatorial Board/General Festival Coordination
Samuel Sidibé, Oumou Dembélé,
   Zakiyatou Halatine, Sina Maiga,
   Stephanie Diakité, Modibo Diarre,
   Vanessa Adams

Music and Dance Commission
Kardigué Laico Traoré, N’tji Bagayoko

Craft Commission
Oumou Maiga

Architecture Commission
Alpha Baba Cissé, Boubacar Mady Diallo

Gastronomy Commission
Ami Sow

Communication Commission
Yiriba Samaké

Tourism Commission
Korotimi Théra

Commercial Crafts Commission
Tidiane Hady Kane

Financial Administrators
Germaine Samaké Sylla, Maimouna Diallo

Ministry of Culture Liaison
Moussa Konaté

Ministry of Security Liaison
Abdoulaye Sow

Foreign Affairs Liaison
Demba Koné

U.S. Embassy Liaison
Gaoussou Mariko

Special thanks to all other members of each of the Festival planning commissions.

Washington
Mary Jo Arnoldi, John Franklin,
   Curatorial Team
Aboubakar Sanogo, Program Coordinator
Diana N’Diaye, Fashion Curator

Style Movement Consultants and Assata
   Thiam, Malian Association, Fashion
   Show Coordinators
Melanie Pinkert, Teachers Seminar Coordinator
Micah Boyer, Elizabeth Clay, Georges
   Alexandre Collinet, Phoebe Eskenazi,
   Irene Kim, Jessica Lee, Adrian Moore,
   Interns

Mali National Planning Commission
Dabele Diassana, Chair; Moussa
   Konaté; Gaoussou Mariko; Abdoulaye
   Sow; Germaine Samaké Sylla; Demba
   Kone; Oumou Maiga; Illal; Fatim
   Kouyaté; Yiriba Samaké; Mamadou
   Soubounou

National Advisory Board
Mossadeck Shada Bally; Alpha Baba
   Cissé; Ousmane Dao; Idrissa Diakité;
   Zakiyatou Halatine; Doulaye Konaté;
   Adam Ba Konaré, co-chair; Fatim
   Kouyaté; Adama Samesekou; Bintou
   Sanankoua; Kléna Sanogo; Samuel Sidibé, co-chair; Bakary Soumanou; Ousmane
   Sow; Djibril Tabouré; Adam Thiam;
   Barthélémy Togo; Ibrahim Ag Yousouf

SCOTLAND AT THE SMITHSONIAN

Nancy Groce, Curator
Stephen Kidd, Program Coordinator
Carley Williams, Program Assistant
Stephanie Smith, Dance Advisor
Michele Hanks, Shannon Haney,
   Fiona Hunter, Hannah Smith, Lindsay
   Waros, Dinah Winnick, Interns
Margaret Bennett, Terry Brotherstone,
   Louise Butler, Duncan Dorman, Davie
   Gardner, Billy Kay, Deirdre MacMahon,
   Hugo Manson, Ed Miller, Chrisella
   Ross, Dr. Ian Russell, Kate Shoupe,
   Anne Steele, Lorna Stoddart, Fergus
   Waters, Researchers

Leadership Committee
Jack McConnell, First Minister,
   Honorary Chair
James Boyle, Chair, Scottish Arts Council

Sir Sean Connery, Actor
Bob Creighton, CEO North America,
   MentorShop
Cathy Hurst, Principal Officer (Acting),
   American Consul General, Edinburgh
Bill Forsyth, Film Director
Bob Irvine, Head, Sports, the Arts and Culture, Education Department,
   Scottish Executive
Peter J. Lederer, Chairman, VisitScotland
Jay Leno, “The Tonight Show with Jay Leno”
Andrew Mackay, Director, The British Council, USA
Graeme N. Munro, Director &
   Chief Executive, Historic Scotland
Robin Pellow, Chief Executive,
   The National Trust for Scotland
C. Duncan Rice, Principal & Vice-Chancellor, University of Aberdeen
Gordon Rintoul, Director, National
   Museums of Scotland
Sir Ian Robinson, Chairman,
   Scottish Enterprise
Susan Stewart, First Secretary of Scottish Affairs, British Embassy,
   Washington, D.C.
John Wallace, Principal, Royal Scottish
   Academy of Music & Drama
Lord David Wilson of Tillyorn,
   Chairman, National Museums of Scotland

Scottish Executive’s Task Force
Bob Irvine, Chair, Head, Sport, the Arts
   and Culture, Education Department,
   Scottish Executive
Graham Berry, Director, Scottish Arts Council
Bill Cameron, Head of Tourism &
   Membership, Historic Scotland
Mike Cooper, Team Leader for Overseas
   Events, Scottish Executive
Maureen Finn, Head of Education,
   National Galleries of Scotland
Denise Hill, Head of International Marketing, VisitScotland
Colin McCallum, Director of Development, National Museums of Scotland
Sheila Murray, British Council, Scotland
Gordon Rintoul, Director, National
   Museums of Scotland
Ian Smith, Scotland & Northern Ireland
   Organiser, Musicians’ Union
Judy Torrance, Marketing Manager &
   Customer Relations, Scottish Enterprise
John Wallace, Principal, Scottish Royal
   Academy of Music & Drama
Advisory Committee
James H. Baron, Personal Representative, Sir Sean Connery
Maureen Barrie, Projects Manager, Museum of Scotland International, National Museums of Scotland
Margaret Bennett, Folklorist & Singer, Hon. Research Fellow, School of Scottish Studies, University of Glasgow
Valentina Bold, Head, Scottish Studies, Crichton Campus, University of Glasgow, Dumfries
Louise Butler, Independent Curator/ Crafts Consultant
Hugh Cheape, Curator of Modern Scottish Collections, National Museums of Scotland
Ted Cowan, Professor of Scottish History, University of Glasgow
Johnny Cunningham, Musician & Composer
George Dalgleish, Curator of Scottish Decorative Arts; Acting Head, Museum of Scotland International, NMS
Sarah Frankland, Arts Manager, The British Council, USA
Michael Hance, Director, The Saltire Society
Colin Hynd, Director, Celtic Connections Festival & Arts Coordinator, The Glasgow Royal Concert Hall
Billy Kay, Writer & Broadcaster, Odyssey Productions
Alison Kinnaid, Musician & Glass Artist
Iain MacDonald, Musician & Instructor, Sabhal Mor Ostaig/Gaelic College, Isle of Skye
Stuart MacDonald, Head of Arts & International, Scottish Arts Council
Margaret Mackay, Director, School of Scottish Studies Archives, University of Edinburgh
George Mackenzie, Keeper of the Records of Scotland, The National Archives of Scotland
Deirdre MacMahon, Arts Consultant, Edinburgh
Robyn Marsack, Director, Scottish Poetry Library
Joyce McMillan, Columnist & Theatre Critic, Edinburgh
Adam McNaughton, Glaswegian
Brian McNell, Musician & Composer, Head of Scottish Music, Royal Scottish Academy of Music & Drama
Ed Miller, Folklorist & Musician, Austin
Doug Orr, President, Warren Wilson College; Founder, Swannanoa Gathering
Dougie Pincock, Director of National Centre of Excellence in Traditional Music, Plockton High School
John N. Randall, Registrar General, General Register Office for Scotland
Fiona Ritchie, Producer/Host, "The Thistle & Shamrock ® ," National Public Radio
Elizabeth Roach, Lyon Clerk & Keeper of the Records, Court of the Lord Lyon King of Arms
Lindsay Robertson, Director, Scottish Traditions of Dance Trust
Ian Russell, Director, Elphinstone Institute, University of Aberdeen
Donald Smith, Director, The Netherbow: Scottish Storytelling Centre
Lorna Stoddart, Head of Development, The National Trust for Scotland
Fergus Waters, Director, Scottish Mining Museum
Sheena Wellington, Musician, Traditional Arts Development Officer, Fife Council
Margaret Bennett, Maureen Barrie, Valentina Bold, Terry Brotherstone, Charlie Camp, Mary Cliff, Jim Deutsch, Bill Innes, Billy Kay, Hugo Manson, Francesca McCrossan, Adam McNaughton, Brian McNell, Ed Miller, Fiona Ritchie, Chrisella Ross, Ian Russell, Stephanie Smith, Sheena Wellington, Gary West, Chris Williams, Presenters

BEAUTIFUL BEYOND: CHRISTIAN SONGS IN NATIVE LANGUAGES
Howard Bass, Program Producer
Linda Martin, Ceni Myles, Program Specialists
Linda Proctor, Program Assistant
Amanda Falske, Intern

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE
Gale A. Norton, Secretary of the Interior
Fran P. Mainella, Director, National Park Service
Donald W. Murphy, Deputy Director, National Park Service
Terry R. Carlstrom, Regional Director, National Capital Region
Teresa C. Chambers, Chief, United States Park Police
Sgt. Roxanne Brown-Ankney, United States Park Police, Special Forces Branch
Arnold M. Goldstein, Superintendent, National Capital Parks-Central Vikki Keys, Deputy Superintendent, National Capital Parks-Central Rick Merryman, Chief, Division of Park Programs
Leonard Lee, Special Events Coordinator, Division of Park Programs
Heidi Strickfaden, Concession Specialist, National Capital Parks-Central Robert Karotko, Chief, Division of Visitor Services
Sean Kennealy, Acting Associate Superintendent, Maintenance

Employees of the National Capital Region and the United States Park Police
In honor of the 37th annual Smithsonian Folklife Festival, Smithsonian Folkways Recordings presents Mali Lolo! Stars of Mali, Scotland the Real: Music from Contemporary Caledonia, as well as classic recordings of Appalachian music from our vast archives.

Mali Lolo

Mali Lolo features guitarist and singer Habib Koité with his Bambara group, and more of Mali's best talent. (SFW 40008)

Roscoe Holcomb: An Untamed Sense of Control

Bob Dylan said, "Roscoe Holcomb has a certain untamed sense of control, which makes him one of the best." Holcomb's white-knuckle recordings make other music seem watered-down in comparison. Self-accompanied on banjo, fiddle, guitar, or harmonica, the songs express the hard life Holcomb lived and the tradition in which he was raised. (SFW 40144)

The Singing Kettle: Singalong Songs from Scotland

Taking their name from their hometown of Kingskettle, Fife, in Scotland, these beloved performers have enchanted children and adults throughout the U.K. Cilla Fisher, Artie Trezise, and Gary Goupilnd offer families and kids the opportunity to sing along with the Singing Kettle, who will be performing at the Folklife Festival. (SFW 45057)

Classic Old-Time Music from Smithsonian Folkways Recordings

Old-time music predates bluegrass, emerging from the string band tradition stretching back to the early years of U.S. history. Both African-American and Anglo-American ingredients are at its core, the banjo having African origins, the fiddle European. Dock Boggs, Roscoe Holcomb, Wade Ward, Tommy Jarrell, and more are heard playing in their original styles. The Grateful Dead's cover of "Don't Let Your Deal Go Down" and Bob Dylan's rendition of Clarence Ashley's "Little Sadie" clearly attest to the continued influence of these songs. (SFW 40093)

Jean Ritchie: Ballads from Her Appalachian Family Tradition

Jean Ritchie, one of America's finest traditional singers, is part of the famous "Singing Ritchies of Kentucky." Based on English and Scottish narrative songs collected and published by scholar Francis James Child in the 19th century, Ritchie's Appalachian versions of the "Child Ballads" tell of true and lost love, jealousy, treachery, grief, death, and the supernatural. This reissue of her landmark Folkways recordings brings her clear, pure voice and timeless songs to a new generation of listeners. (SFW 40144)

Mike Seeger: True Vine

Grammy nominee Mike Seeger. Mountain music legend Ralph Stanley said of Mike, "I'd say he educated a lot of people...in the old-time music." True Vine reflects Mike's connection to his deepest musical roots and represents the latest blossoming of his exploration of musical styles. (SFW 40136)

Scotland the Real: Music from Contemporary Caledonia

Scotland the Real includes the Battlefield Band, the Wrigley Sisters, Capercaille, Phil Cunningham and Aly Bain, Fiddlers' Bid, and more. Many of these artists will be featured at this year's Festival! (SFW 40411)

Classic Mountain Songs from Smithsonian Folkways Recordings

This album showcases the greatest mountain ballads, performed by some of the most influential folk singers and songwriters of the 20th century. Classic performances from the mountain communities of North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee highlight old-time fiddle, banjo pieces, early bluegrass, and traditional ballads and emphasize Appalachian vocal traditions. Doc and Merle Watson, Roscoe Holcomb, Clarence Ashley, and Dock Boggs are just a few of the revered roots artists who appear in this stellar compilation. (SFW 40094)

The Silk Road: A Musical Caravan

This album offers a panoramic sweep of the vast and rich musical territory across the heart of Asia. Produced in collaboration with the Silk Road Project, an international cultural initiative founded by renowned cellist Yo-Yo Ma, this 2-CD set presents traditional music from Afghanistan, China, Iran, Kazakhstan, Mongolia, Tajikistan, and other central Eurasian nations and peoples. Most of these tracks were recorded on location and have never before been commercially available. (SFW 40438)

Smithsonian Folkways Recordings

www.folkways.si.edu 800.410.9815 folkways@aol.com
The 2003 Folklife Festival Program Book

Designed by Denise Arnot in Bembo with display lines in Trade Gothic. Bembo was modeled on typefaces cut by Francesco Griffo in 1495 in Venice, Italy. Stanley Morison supervised the design of Bembo for the Monotype Corporation in 1929. Trade Gothic was designed by Jackson Burke between 1948 and 1960 for Linotype. Printed on Domtar Titanium by Finlay Printing, Bloomfield, Connecticut. Binding by Finlay Printing.